Understanding the Format of Your Compatibility Profile

On the following pages is a highly-sophisticated computerized astrological interpretation of the compatibility between two individuals. This report differs from other astrological relationship reports that you may have experienced, in that it is a SYNTHESIZED interpretation.

Most computer reports compare two horoscopes piece-by-piece, giving you an interpretation of each planet in sign, house and aspect for one person in comparison with each planet in sign, house and aspect for the other person. Such reports can be very instructive for students of astrology because they learn to identify from just what astrological factor each piece of interpretive information is derived. But the problem with the piece-by-piece report is that the student often ends up with lots of little bits of information that may not fit together very well, or that seem to contradict each other.

Let's face it — our lives often ARE contradictory! However, admitting that fact still does not provide us with an easy means of weighing all those little bits of information to understand what is most important and then to “pull it together” into a sense of the whole.

Compatibility Profile uses state-of-the-art computer programming to provide you with an interpretation that “pulls it all together” for you. All of the myriad pieces of astrological information in each horoscope are searched for repeated themes. These are weighed and blended to produce interpretive paragraphs that give you a much more accurate sense of the potential compatibility of the two individuals whose charts are interpreted, than any piece-by-piece report could provide.

1. The FIRST SECTION gives a short interpretation of the basic personality of each individual — “Who's Who.” This is very important, for our compatibility potential with ANY other person begins with our own basic personality needs and our capacity to relate.
2. The SECOND SECTION continues the individual analysis with “Who Wants What.” This section focuses on the specific relationship desires and needs of each individual. Again, this is very important, for how we get along with ANY other person stems from what we, ourselves, are looking for in that type of relationship.
3. The THIRD SECTION begins the comparison of the two charts with “How You Impact One Another.” Here, the interactions between the two horoscopes are thoroughly examined. The interpretations are addressed as issues for each person to consider in relating to the other person.

In this section, a further key to understanding can be found in the TYPEFACE of each interpretive paragraph. Bold Type indicates conflict, Italic Type indicates harmony and Plain Type indicates that the issue is neutral area between the two people that could be expressed as either harmony or conflict. These distinctions are explained in more detail in the introduction to the section.

4. The FOURTH SECTION is labeled “Challenges.” Here, you will find a focus on the “Red Flag” issues that may be most likely to cause problems between the two people. Polarities — areas in which the two of you are likely to become “out-of-balance” with each other if you do not understand your dynamics of interaction — are also interpreted.

5. The FIFTH SECTION interprets the “Strengths” in the interactions between the two horoscopes. Basic strengths between the two people are often closely tied to the dominant elemental “type” of the personalities (fire, earth, air or water). Other strengths are reflected by aspect contacts between the charts. This section first analyzes the elemental emphases and then gives short interpretations of the contact strengths .

Each section begins with a short introduction that gives you hints and examples to help you make the most of the personalized information you receive. Please do not neglect to read these introductory paragraphs, for they are carefully designed to help you receive the best possible benefit from this report.

The text of this Compatibility Profile report was written by Maritha Pottenger, a widely-known and highly-respected astrological consultant who also holds an M.A. degree in clinical psychology. For further information on the specific system of astrological synthesis that she uses in her work, see her book: Astrology: The Next Step, which can be ordered from us here at ACS, or obtained through your local bookstore, for $25.95.

Astrological Annotation included within this report is available upon request. This is for the benefit of astrologers who wish to know which astrological factors were considered for the text of each interpretive paragraph. If you ordered Compatibility Profile in the Annotated Version you will find one or more lines of astrological glyphs before each interpretive paragraph. This is a list of every factor from which that paragraph theme was derived.

Introduction

Few areas in life are more important than the people with whom we share our lives. Our early family relationships, including with brothers, sisters, aunts, uncles, nieces, nephews, cousins and more, often have a strong impact on our lives. It is as if the early associations are a crucible, setting the tone and the patterns, which we continue to repeat with people we meet later. Positive early relationships make later relationships easier and more fulfilling. Negative early relationships contribute to overall stress and may mean we have to work harder to find happiness with others. Of course, most relationships have a mixture of positive and negative. And many relationships are amenable to change; we can create more supportive, and more fulfilling interactions than we have had in the past.

There is an extremely vital point to remember in terms of family relationships. Although we cannot change the past (in terms of what happened), we can change our perceptions about the past and our attitude toward that past. By changing our perceptions, we create a new future. Suppose, for example, a girl grew up with an older brother who she felt was always angry with her and aggressive. She may have coped with the situation by retreating and avoiding him as much as possible. Perhaps as a woman she now continues to retreat and avoid whenever someone around her becomes angry. By going back and analyzing the past, she comes to see her brother's anger as connected to his inner needs, and not particularly related to her actions at all. She may also come to a redefinition of power and strength. She showed her strength, when she was younger and more physically vulnerable, by retreating. She can recognize other avenues of strength and self-protection now. She can choose to change the pattern of how she deals with angry people, no longer reacting in an old, automatic fashion--but choosing the best response based on her reading of the current situation!

This report is designed to help you make the most of your relationship (past, present and future) with this relative.

Section One: Who's Who

This first section addresses the issue of who you are and who your relative is. The basic themes in your identity are discussed first, then basic drives and motivations within your relative are covered. We begin with an exploration of each of you singly, and move later to the two of you together. The focus is on central psychological motifs within each of you. If you each understand the principles involved, you can choose to express them in positive rather than in negative ways. Every human drive has a potentially positive (and a potentially painful) side. Through increased consciousness, we can express more often our fulfilling options.

Who Orion is

Big Dreams

Personal faith and optimism are likely to be quite high. Generally confident, you are probably willing to take risks for the chance of a greater return. Inclined to "think big," you may dream and scheme on a grand scale. Often your gambling and speculating skills are marked.

Truth may be a central issue in your life. Usually honesty is very important to you. Indeed, an excess of bluntness may sometimes lead you to the position of foot-in-mouth. Probably very expressive and even impulsive in your behavior, what people see is what they get with you. Forthright and direct, you are usually quite clear about what you want and what your plans are.

Commonly, a religious or philosophical belief system is an important focus for you. You may be seeking the truth (the meaning of life) through a religion, a spiritual quest, education, science, travel or other restless avenues explored in the quest for answers. If you ever stop searching and believe you have found the answer, you can be quite ruthless in your proselytizing. The instincts of a missionary are one potential in your makeup.

Blessed with a fine sense of humor and an innate ability to look on the bright side of life, you are able to share good cheer with those about you, find the silver lining and look forward to the future which you trust will always be an improvement!

Fantastic Fantasies

Your ideals and expectations are likely to be of the highest order. Wanting and seeking the best in life comes very naturally to you. If carried too far, you could easily demand too much of yourself. It might be that you believe, "I have to be a saint; I have to be perfect." You might demand of yourself that you always be compassionate, or always know the "right" answers to all the questions. Such impossible demands just set you up to feel dissatisfied with yourself.

Another extreme is to overidentify with the quest for the ultimate. In such a case, people act as if they already have divine dispensation. They believe they have a right to whatever they want and act as if they cannot make a mistake or do anything wrong.

The medium ground involves staying in touch with ideals and visions for improvement, without demanding more than is reasonable from the self (or believing you already have it all together). One potential skill is the ability to focus on the positive in life. As long as it is not overdone (into rose-colored glasses or starry-eyed idealism), this indicates the ability to see what is best in others and strive to promote it. This is a talent of any good visualizer--noticing what is closest to your vision, supporting it, affirming it, visualizing even more of your dreams, and working to promote them.

Faith is a central issue here--both conscious and unconscious faith. There is the need for enough faith in the self to act, take chances and seek what one wants in life--without so much faith that one is rash, overconfident or believes one has a right to anything. There is also the need for enough faith in a Higher Power that one trusts life will ultimately work out positively--not giving in to despair--and that if we do our part, God will do the rest (so we need not fall prey to a "savior side" which tempts us to try to take care of the whole world by ourselves). By utilizing your faith positively and sensibly (in the right place and time without overdoing or underdoing it), you can work wonders.

Great Expectations

You may possess an instinctive grace, a smooth coordination of movement which makes some sports a work of art (e.g., skating, diving, gymnastics, etc.) Your body is in tune with a need for beauty which can be reflected in your actions, your appearance or your aesthetic interests. Active creation of beauty (e.g., dancing, Tai Chi) is especially likely.

Some ambivalence is possible. One side of your nature is drawn toward self-sacrifice, being absorbed by others, merging with a larger whole and martyr motifs. Another side of your nature is extremely active, self-willed, expressive, self-centered and intent on personal freedom. Integrating these two themes will require a healthy dose of each. You will need to avoid extremes of either side--too much focus on personal wants or too much sacrifice of your own needs.

Personal ideals are likely to be high; you expect a lot of yourself. Whether you channel those demands in terms of looking beautiful, helping or healing the world, assisting others, trying to be perfect, or some other choice is your option. An active pursuit of your ideals and vision of beauty is called for. Your energy can help create a vision of something better for the world.

"I did it MY way."

You are yourself and place a premium on being yourself. Acting on instinct is important to you and you are willing to fight for your rights to self-expression. Direct and forthright, what people see and hear is what they get; you won't play games.

Assertive, you are capable of aggression if you feel personally threatened. Your pioneering spirit means that you do not compromise easily in relationships. You need a lot of space and room to express your independence. People who demand too much in the way of commitment or firm schedules from you are likely to turn around and find you gone. You can be a law unto yourself at times. Impatient at times, you do not handling waiting well. You are eager to get on to the next challenge.

Your energy level is probably higher than the average. You may channel some of it into sports or other physical activities. You need to move. Self-confidence is a normal state of mind for you. You are your most important asset and you know it. Because freedom of action and thinking matter to you, you are generally willing to grant them to others as well. You resist limits, confinement, structure and inhibitions. You support spontaneity, courage, the taking of risks, action and being oneself.

Who Lilith is

Warm & Wonderful

A warm and loving person, you have much to share with others. Having a strong parenting instinct, you find it natural to protect, nurture and be emotionally supportive of others. Children, pets and those you love can look to you for shelter from any sort of storm. Usually a home and family are central to your happiness.

You can be highly creative in many arenas. Your energy might be channeled into children, recreational projects, hobbies, or artistic outlets (including public performances). You need to shine in some way and feel more emotionally secure when you have an outlet for your magnetism and creativity. Whether your audience is family or the wider world, you need a sense of being appreciated, applauded or admired. Recognition feeds your emotional roots.

Although your feelings are very strong, you do not always reveal them. Indeed, you may experience ambivalence over how much to show you care. Sometimes you can be quite spontaneous and expressive of your emotions and other times you want to hide and not reveal what you are feeling. Holding back and suppressing so that things build up to the explosive point could create problems. The challenge is to express your reactions smoothly and naturally along the way (without sharing more than you feel is appropriate).

You can be the most loving and caring of individuals!

Star Quality

Recognition is a central theme for you. You have strong creative needs which call for expression. Your self-esteem is partially dependent on the reactions of other people; you really need to be appreciated and admired. If you trust and believe in your own center and creativity, you are likely to be quite dramatic, magnetic, exciting and a natural extrovert. If you are unsure whether other people might laugh or not, you may well be hiding your own light under a bushel, denying your dramatic instincts, and sitting on your natural charisma. You may be afraid to risk, lest people laugh rather than applauding.

You need to be a star in some fashion. It is natural for you to shine, for you to achieve importance, recognition, renown and positive feedback from the world. You have much to give to the world. Your creativity can be expressed through children, entertainment, teaching, performing arts, speculation or other risk-taking, "on stage" activities. Activities which feed a healthy pride in yourself are highly recommended. Anything which puts you center-stage (e.g., teaching, promoting, selling, acting, entertaining, etc.) is superlative for encouraging your risk-taking, dynamic potential. You need to do more than has been done before.

Impressive

Exciting, dynamic, and spontaneous, you can bring excitement into people's lives. Courageous and willing to take risks, you may gamble in love, in work, in the stock market or elsewhere. You are likely to put your whole heart into project; no halfway measures. When you are excited by something or someone, your charisma sweeps other people along as well. With you, it becomes easy to enjoy life's moments of sparkle.

Instinctively dramatic, you are the sort of person people notice when you walk into a room. You may well have talent for selling, promoting and persuading people. You can easily claim center stage and may be drawn to the grand gesture or big project. A marvelous initiator and pioneer, you have great talent for beginning things and getting people started. Your enthusiasm sparks the interest of others.

A keen sense of fun is probable. You tend to live life to the hilt. Impulsiveness is possible and you may sometimes charge into projects without a full investigation. However, your confidence, energy, humor and magnetism generally see you through. People often find you very attractive. Your natural warmth, excitement and free-spirited approach draws others like a warm fire on a cold day.

A Real Charmer

You can be extremely charming and appealing through a combination of tactful friendliness and innate magnetism and charisma. Although some might accuse you of flattery, you are really just honestly appreciative of what you value in others. You are willing to share your approval, just as you enjoy compliments from others. The good will of other people matters to you, and you may sometimes be too vulnerable to the opinions of others.

Often blessed with good taste, you may be drawn to all the finer things in life. When you make a purchase, the quality will be of the highest; only the best appeals to you. You can enjoy life's luxuries, but may feel some tension in the area of finances and indulgences. One side of your nature is willing to spend at any time, while the other side is much more cautious about money. One part of you enjoys buying items for personal indulgence; the other side gets pleasure through buying things for loved ones. As long as you do not set it up as a contest, there does not have to be a problem. You can enjoy your private pleasures while also expressing generosity toward others.

A strong feeling for beauty is quite likely. You may enjoy artistic/aesthetic outlets, especially the performing arts or those involving an element of drama and stage presence. Other people are likely to enjoy your capacity for excitement and ability to get them emotionally involved with what is going on. A natural persuader, you can touch people's feelings--able to both excite and to soothe.

Section Two: Who Wants What

This section deals with the needs and issues you and your relative bring to your relationship. It covers the attitudes you both have about one another and what each of you is likely to elicit from the other as responses. It is based on an astrological analysis of each of your charts with special focus on the area of family relationships.

It is important to remember the cosmic principle of balance which operates in family relationships: we come into families who can help us learn to be more fully ourselves, to balance sides of our nature which are out of balance with the whole. Thus, if we deny a part of our own potential, we are likely to have a family member who will manifest that denied potential for us--often in excess.

A common example is the process of "dividing up the territory" which siblings often undergo. Many parents have noted that their children seem to claim various "turfs" or areas of "expertise," and the later-born are reluctant to "invade the territory" of an older sibling. Thus, if the first born child is a "brain," the second-born may strive for recognition through sports, the third-born may be social butterfly, etc.

The danger here is that siblings often deny their own potentials from a reluctance to step outside these artificial boundaries. Also, whenever one party in a relationship is identified as the "sole provider" of certain qualities, that party is likely to overdo those qualities. Thus, if one sibling takes on the role of the intellectual, that sibling is likely to be too articulate, too detached, too intellectualizing and live too much in the head. If one sibling takes on the role of the sports champion, that sibling is likely to be too physical, too assertive, too focused on winning, etc. If one sibling takes on the role of the socializer, that sibling is likely to be too other-directed, too emotionally dependent on the responses of other people, too hooked on having fun, etc.

The cosmic principle of wholeness presents us with family members who will mirror (often in excess) those parts of our own nature which we have not fully developed or allowed ourselves to express. Siblings are one of the most common mirrors for us to face our own potentials (positive and negative).

The person who consciously identifies only with the need to please people and be liked, may very well have a relative who is angry, aggressive and unpleasant to others. One relative is overdoing the need to be nice; the other is overdoing the need to express oneself. Both are mirroring for the other a missing side. The two principles, if combined, equal harmony and balance. Either one, alone, is an extreme--and usually uncomfortable for the people concerned.

When extremes or polarities are present in a family relationship, it is usually an indication that each person is overdoing one human potential. Often the two relatives involved have divided up life. One is doing too much of one side; the other is doing too much of another side of life. The goal of relationships is balance. It is not a case that one person is "wrong" and the other is "right." Rather are they both "right" (and both "wrong"). Each needs to do a little bit more of what the other is doing (but not to such an extreme).

Of course, not everyone is willing to change. If one relative changes, but the other does not, the first person will have different interactions with everyone else in his/her life. The second relative will continue to play the same games, acting out the same extremes in other life relationships. The more internal balance we attain, the more outer balance we reach in our relationships.

When reading through this section, recall that the horoscope illustrates the issues each of you is facing within this relationship. You can choose to find a middle ground for each issue, or you can live out one extreme end of a polarity, with your relative expressing the other extreme. If the seesaw ever becomes uncomfortable, you can always choose to express a moderate, comfortable blend of both sides of a given issue. By understanding your drives, you can manifest them in ways which are fulfilling and satisfying.

Recall also that a greater awareness of the issues helps you to appreciate your past actions. You can learn from your experiences and change unfulfilling patterns to more satisfying interactions.

Relationship Issues for Orion

Deep Waters

You understand familial associations on levels much deeper than the surface appearance. Intuitive and perceptive, you can tune into relatives and understand them without words. Your psychic connections aid you in sharing your deeper feelings (and possibly past life connections) with a family member.

Unconscious motivations can easily affect your relative associations. Both you and a relative could react to past experiences and be playing old "games" in the present time. Analyzing past relationships and resolving any old resentments can keep current relationships cleaner and healthier. Nonverbal understanding can contribute to the bond between you, but do not expect it to solve everything. Buried issues can suddenly surface as a load of garbage, so constantly strive to be aware and bring feelings to consciousness.

The best of this theme in familial associations is exhibited by two people who are "in tune" with one another. Sensitive to one another's inner needs, they can gently but firmly bring up important issues and face them unflinchingly. Each is a source of strength for the other in working through old conflicts. Each encourages the other to live on an increasingly higher level.

More Than Flesh and Blood

You can experience relationships with relatives on a very deep level. Your emotions are stronger and more intense than most people's. When you care, it reaches to the very roots of your soul. Family is a serious matter.

Your familial associations are likely to arouse intense emotions. You (and relatives) may experience ambivalence between holding things inside versus letting them out. Feelings held in too long might even explode out. Honesty and secrecy could vie for supremacy. You (and/or your relative) may well swing from the heights of ecstasy to the depths of despair. You are capable of having a tremendous impact on one another.

The best expression of this motif is shown by two relatives who share their hidden fears and reassure each other, inspiring one another to greater joy through shared optimism, faith and trust.

Looking For The Best

Truly do you seek the best in your familial associations. Your standards are higher than those of most people. By visualizing and expecting more, you can help to create it. You are likely to yearn for ideal interactions with family members.

Your feelings about kinfolk are probably strongly tied to your perception of the absolute in life--truth, the infinite, ultimate meaning, and inspiration. Your relatives could be visionary, idealistic, religious, missing, absent or victims unhappy with the state of their lives. Roles of saint, savior or martyr may appeal to either of you. Both you and your relative may want more than is possible from each other and from family members.

The best of this theme is found by two relatives searching together for a sense of union with something Higher. A shared connection through art, Nature, beauty, spiritual quests or other idealistic avenues can be an intense bond and an uplifting source.

Confronting Collaterals

You can be deeply affected by familial associations. Capable of an intense commitment, you are open to being changed by your relatives. You may be transformed through your interactions. You are likely to face parts of yourself in the mirror of other family members.

You and your relative are facing issues around self-restraint and the ability to share the material/sensual world with each other. One option is power struggles, especially around money, possessions, or sex. Another option is discovering the importance of self-mastery and developing greater self-control through sharing interactions with a relative. A respect of your own personal power and a recognition of the rights and power of this family member can develop out of your testing exchanges.

The best expression of this theme involves two very strong, very intense relatives who gain a greater understanding of themselves through loving and confronting another person.

Relationship Issues for Lilith

Complacent Clan

Your family associations can be a source of considerable personal gratification. You have the capacity to actively seek pleasure through interactions with relatives. You can go after and get what you want with other people--for mutual benefit.

Your family interactions are dealing with the issue of personal needs. Your relatives (and you) could be strong, determined and in touch with what they want. They (or you) might also be too self-oriented, self-indulgent or lacking in empathy for others. A tendency to bulldoze onward might be carried too far.

You and this relative are learning about when to put yourself first in relationships and about the importance of enjoying life and appreciating each other.

The best expression of this theme in terms of family interactions involves two people who are active in meeting their desires, genuinely like one another, and find pleasure in each other's satisfaction.

Confronting Collaterals

You can be deeply affected by familial associations. Capable of an intense commitment, you are open to being changed by your relatives. You may be transformed through your interactions. You are likely to face parts of yourself in the mirror of other family members.

You and your relative are facing issues around self-restraint and the ability to share the material/sensual world with each other. One option is power struggles, especially around money, possessions, or sex. Another option is discovering the importance of self-mastery and developing greater self-control through sharing interactions with a relative. A respect of your own personal power and a recognition of the rights and power of this family member can develop out of your testing exchanges.

The best expression of this theme involves two very strong, very intense relatives who gain a greater understanding of themselves through loving and confronting another person.

Spontaneous Stock

There is a strong theme connected to owning your own power in family associations. This points to a need for relationships which allow considerable independence, self-expression and spontaneity--for both people.

It is possible for either you or a relative to overdo the expression of these drives. If either of you is out of touch with his/her own personal power, the other one may be excessively vulnerable. S/he is apt to believe s/he needs the other person for affection, approval and support. One relative may end up denying many personal needs, constantly trying to please the relative. Resentment and anger are likely to build up until they break out (probably in an uncomfortable fashion). Intense rivalry and competition are possible.

When feeling at the mercy of someone else's actions, another extreme is to attack first (e.g., put the other person down before s/he has a chance to hurt you). Or, if confrontation seems too threatening, you or a relative might just withdraw from relating, retreat as a self-protective measure.

When both people are centered and in touch with their courage and personal power, compromise and cooperation comes more easily. Neither is threatened by having to give up a little in order to gain more together. With a firm sense of inner strength, you both can encourage one another to be more of who you are. Together, you allow each other considerable freedom, support one another's self-expression and can enjoy activities involving physical exertion, risk-taking, excitement or competition.

The best expression of this theme is a relationship which encourages you to be more fully yourself-- and your relative to more fully actualize his/her potentials.

Sensual Stock

With a strong sensual nature, your family interactions could lead to shared pleasure from food, other physical sensations, or the enjoyment of money. You can gain satisfaction through moderate indulgence, balanced by a sense of self-control that keeps you from excessive hedonism.

A polarity principle is being faced through your family associations. You and your relative are striving to stay centered between self-indulgence and mastery of the appetites. The battleground might be around food (dieting versus overeating), sexuality (sex versus celibacy), drinking (or not drinking), money (spending/saving or earning it yourself/depending on someone else) or other avenues. If you identify with one end of the polarity and a relative plays out the other, power struggles are likely. The goal is learning reasonable limits through your interactions.

The best of this theme is manifested by two relatives who can fully savor life together, yet are not ruled by their physical appetites and desires.

Section Three: How You Impact One Another

This section is concerned with the astrological contacts between your charts. These contacts reveal the nature of the themes you two will face in your association. Each theme has a positive and a negative side, and you both have the personal power to choose as you wish. All themes should be considered for both people, but the issues indicated for each person are most relevant for that individual. If any themes are listed for BOTH people, they are particularly significant in your mutual association.

Paragraphs which are printed in boldface indicate that the themes involved take extra attention, that slipping into uncomfortable patterns is a little easier. Once such themes are integrated, you and your relative are more versatile, able to handle many differing drives in life. You can have very fulfilling interactions, provided you both remain aware of the issues and choose positive forms of expression.

Paragraphs which are printed in italic indicate that the themes involved are easier to express in a positive manner. The two of you can complement one another naturally in these areas. If you allow the flow of instinctive harmony, you can express these shared drives in mutually satisfying fashions.

Paragraphs which are printed in normal type indicate that the themes involved are configured in a neutral fashion between your two charts. These motifs can easily be expressed in positive or negative fashion (and you are likely to do some of both as you work toward balance in the relationship). If you each accept responsibility for your own actions and issues, finding a balance will be relatively easy. You can co-create a mutually pleasing result.

Paragraphs which contain a mixture of typestyles indicate that the contacts between you are a mixture of neutral, conflict and harmony. Mixtures may involve two of the three possibilities or all three.

Issues for Orion to recognize in relating to Lilith

Transpersonal

If you sometimes feel this relative is more than one person, you are right (in a way). Your interactions with this family member incorporate all of humanity in some fashion. It could be that your relative is simply very versatile, and capable of being many different people, depending on the situation. It could also be that the two of you--together--tune into humanity on a subliminal level. It could also be that both of you stimulate each other's humanitarian sides and experience a need to be involved on a wider level, to enlarge your perspective. Astrology or other new-age tools may be shared interests for you. Your thinking is likely to encompass much more than the simple one-to-one relationship between you two. Your consciousness is expanded.

Idols and Images

Dreams are the focus between the two of you. Issues revolve around faith and ideals. It is possible that one of you is teaching faith to the other--to trust in the universe, to believe that all will end up fine. Perhaps one of you has too much faith (rash, foolhardy) and is learning through this relative to balance trust with caution. Perhaps one of you has been placing your faith in limited areas--expecting other people to be godlike, demanding the perfect job, seeking the ideal mate. It might be that this family member can teach you about faith in a Higher Power--through religion, spiritual studies, Nature, meditation, personal example, etc. If you idolize each other, you will end up being disappointed. If you idealize each other only to the extent of encouraging the best in the other person, you will each help your relative to reach his/her highest potentials.

Receptive

You may literally make beautiful music together. A shared artistic connection is quite possible in this relationship, or you may simply consider each other beautiful or seek beauty together. Some idealization is likely; don't put each other up on pedestals. If either of you expects too much from the other, disillusionment and disappointment lie ahead. Savior/victim relationships are possible with one of you regularly rescuing the other from the consequences of his/her folly. Although your preference is for an ideal, perfect relationship, the orientation is likely to be passive and laid-back. Both you and your relative are more likely to take a receptive attitude (waiting for things to come to you). Relaxing together can be pleasurable and anything which enhances beauty or requires imagination is of high value to you both.

Helping Hands

What is the balance between your idealism quotient and your realism quotient? If the balance is good, this is probably a relationship between fellow artists, or people who share a dream/a vision of a better world and are doing something in a practical way to improve the world. If you are still working on the balance, you might have a victim relative who will expect you to "save" him/her (i.e., make everything perfect). Or, you might have a relative who tries to play God to you--telling you how to improve your life to make it more ideal. One of you could be seeing the other via rose-colored glasses, only to face a disappointing reality later. Your relative could put you up on a pedestal and be horribly disillusioned when you eventually come crashing off! For happiness, share the sense of wonder in the universe with your relative, but also share a good, sensible appreciation of the physical facts of life.

Issues for Lilith to recognize in relating to Orion

Mastery

Control is an issue between you. With mutual respect, this can be a relationship between two, very strong, very responsible, hard-driving individuals. If either of you unconsciously takes on a parental role (e.g., feeling responsible for a relative), power struggles are likely. One or the other of you might feel blocked, inhibited, put down, criticized and inadequate for a time. But it does not last. Eventually the family member who has been suppressed will fight back. Then the battle royal is joined! An earthquake is small potatoes compared to this clash of titans! It is not so much the outer reverberations. You two would be like the irresistible force and the immovable object: tremendous will and power opposing equally tremendous will and power. In the end, if you fight, neither wins. However, if you can find a way, a cause, a path, a project, or an ideal of some sort for which you both can fight, or push or struggle, your shared power potential is incredible.

Bossy Brood

This is a relationship that could be very enduring if you make it over the rough spots. It is possible that you could work together, and that would make the relationship easier to handle. Without a shared practical focus, critical judgment could be a problem. Either of you may feel put down by the other, or as if one relative is trying to dominate and control. One of you is likely to see the other as too impulsive or self-absorbed. If you both can practice tolerance and channel flaw-finding impulses into shared tasks and accomplishments, this can be a productive relationship. If not, one or both of you is likely to feel that you are fighting with Dad (or an authority figure) all over again. A shared drive for achievement can be an important bond between you.

Bound By Blood

A shared sense of responsibility (or guilt) may bind the two of you together. Perhaps you work with one another. Or you may have a joint appreciation of achievement. This relationship stimulates your need to accomplish and work for tangible results in the world. You may both be quite duty-conscious and inclined to take responsibilities onto your own shoulders. Indeed, you could even get caught in power struggles, with one of you trying to dominate or control the other. One relative might try to play the authority--controlling and restrictive--to the other.

You need arenas to assert your strength, abilities and determination to have an impact on the world. You both may have an awareness of flaws and shortcomings. The challenge is to channel that critical consciousness into productive efforts rather than nit-picking or putting other people down. You can achieve a great deal together, if you choose to support and affirm one another's strength and power. You are likely to take each other seriously and are willing to make a firm commitment to one another.

Power Drive

You are teaching each other about power through your relationship. This can include two people who are moving, shaking and doing in the world. You may have a broad impact on other people. You could both be power centers. If you are still learning to handle power, either of you might experience the other as too controlling, wanting to have ALL the power and trying to overwhelm you. With experience, you both will learn to use the tremendous potential you possess in a tempered and effective fashion. Without falling into arrogance, you can build your competence and ability to take charge. By challenging one another, you each gain a greater sense of your own potential.

Section Four: Challenges

This section continues the focus on astrological contacts between your charts. There are certain "red flag" issues in relationships which are touchy for many people. In family relationships, these include topics such as money, jealousy, and attention from others (beginning with parents).

First the significant "red flags" for each of you are listed, so that you can be sensitive to one another and work toward a caring, but detached attitude when these issues come up. The "red flag" listed merely defines the issue. You and your relative will know how that issue is being handled. Remember that each is a challenge, not an automatic problem. It should be read as a cautionary note. Take a look at the topics listed. They may point to sensitive areas where the two of you need to tread carefully. They may highlight challenges which must be faced. Many times, particularly if you both are old enough to have lived, learned and grown a little, you will be manifesting the energy of a "red flag" potential, rather than any difficulties. The Up side which is listed for each "red flag" gives the positive potential which exists once you have mastered the issues involved. Please do not assume that these red flags will wreak havoc in your association! Do discuss the possibilities with your relative!

Red flags are based on the interactions between your charts, so usually will be the same for both of you. Occasionally, however, a red flag will be listed for one of you, but not the other. This suggests that the red flag is a more personal concern for the individual in whose section it occurs. Obviously, however, red flags--if still on the down side rather than the up side--must be addressed by both people for successful resolution and satisfying interactions.

Following the red flags is a listing of polarities which are likely to be meaningful in your shared interactions. Relatives are very likely to "divide up the territory." It is as if one person agrees to do one half of a certain drive, while the other does the other half. If they aren't careful, however, they end up at opposite extremes on various issues. This section will identify those polarities likely to be important in your association. By staying aware of these issues, you can find that more comfortable middle ground and avoid the extremes which so often lead to discomfort and disagreements between family members. Remember that each polarity is a natural partnership. The goal is to find a comfortable blend which allows some of each (without overdoing either side).

If, for example, a polarity involves "heart/head," one relative might tend to manifest logic, thinking and objectivity a lot, while the other brings in feelings and emotions. If they allow themselves to polarize around these differences, conflicts might arise. The one emphasizing the "head" side of this polarity could see his/her relative as too emotional, hysterical or irrational, while the one emphasizing the "heart" side could view his/her relative as too cold, uncaring and aloof. The key to any polarity is to be sure that both people are capable of expressing each side. This does not mean people have to be exactly alike! It does mean neither one completely disowns one side of a polarity. If you and your relative are already in balance in regard to the polarities listed, then you're doing it right!

Red flags for Orion

Addiction

Potential challenges around food, alcohol, drugs, spending, dependency. (Up side is being sensitive, supportive, psychologically aware.)

Children/Home

Differences around handling children or the domestic arena are possible. Dependency issues (too much or too little) could arise. (Up side is much love and mutual nurturing.)

Communication Issues

Communication challenges are quite possible. They could range from too much bluntness, to inhibited communication, to excessive criticism, to inequality of talking and listening, to "not hearing" each other. (Up side is ability to discuss almost anything with a balance between objectivity and compassion.)

Idealism (High Standards)/Escapism/Fantasies

Wishful thinking, magical images and "what if" fantasies may abound. You could want more than is possible from family members, don't see rose-colored glasses and end up disappointed, or in savior/victim entanglements. Either of you may seek the "perfect" association that does not exist. (Up side is good capacity to visualize goals, to forgive each other, to recognize and cherish the Higher Self--best potentials--of one another.)

Red flags for Lilith

Communication Issues

Communication challenges are quite possible. They could range from too much bluntness, to inhibited communication, to excessive criticism, to inequality of talking and listening, to "not hearing" each other. (Up side is ability to discuss almost anything with a balance between objectivity and compassion.)

Power

One or both of you may feel the other is trying to control or dominate you. Power struggles are a possibility. (Up side is willingness to move mountains for each other.)

Work Demands

The responsibilities and pressure of a career, work in the outer world and time management could impact your relationship. Either or both of you could feel torn between sharing and work--between time and energy to your association versus time and energy into making a living. Either of you may feel the other withholds, rations or limits affection. (Up side is a solid, dependable bond which you both work on improving.)

Appearance

Physical appearances might be overvalued. "Looking good" in the eyes of others could be given too much weight. (Up side is strong artistic, aesthetic appreciation and possible talent.)

Passivity/Polite Lies

Either of you might gloss over the truth (or hide it) in order to "save" someone's feelings. Passivity might occur when action is needed. "Niceness" could be overvalued. (Up side is skill at seeing the positive potential in yourself and others, good capacity to forgive and forget minor irritations.)

Possessiveness/Security Needs

One or both of you may carry the desire for security (physical and emotional) to an extreme of possessiveness or envy. (Up side is great loyalty and commitment.)

Polarities for Orion

Assertion/Accommodation

One of you is confident and sure; the other is worried about hurting someone, being hurt, being blocked by limits or rules. One person is ready to charge ahead while the other worries what others will think. (Up side is confidence mixed with empathy so you consistently seek win-win solutions.)

Bluntness (truth)/Tact (compassion)

One of you favors "the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth" (sometimes called foot-in-mouth) while the other believes in the value of "little white lies" and being polite. (Up side is basic honesty blended with appropriate tact and consideration.)

Details/Overview

One of you sees the forest; the other is busily dissecting each individual tree down to its molecular structure! (Up side is understanding the major issues in your relationship, such as love and trust, while able to focus on details and particular tasks when needed.)

Critical Judgment/Flaw Finding/Duties/Practicalities or Responsibilities

Flaw-finding and nit-picking might be overdone by either or both of you. You may find yourselves at odds over issues of responsibility, especially in terms of household chores, duties, and meeting basic, practical needs. (Up side is good practicality and common sense about each other, skill at handling the details of your association and a willingness to work hard to improve your relationship.)

Polarities for Lilith

Assertion/Accommodation

One of you is confident and sure; the other is worried about hurting someone, being hurt, being blocked by limits or rules. One person is ready to charge ahead while the other worries what others will think. (Up side is confidence mixed with empathy so you consistently seek win-win solutions.)

Bluntness (truth)/Tact (compassion)

One of you favors "the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth" (sometimes called foot-in-mouth) while the other believes in the value of "little white lies" and being polite. (Up side is basic honesty blended with appropriate tact and consideration.)

Ease/Effort

Do you polarize around the playful spirit and the workaholic, or the person who sweats for everything they accomplish and the person who glides through life? Who relaxes and who does hard labor? (Up side is balance between work and play, between enjoyment and accomplishment.)

Flexible/Rigid

One of you is adaptable, while the other holds firm to every stand. (Up side is being firm on basics and flexible on details.)

Head/Heart

The two of you may polarize around emotions versus detachment, or thinking versus feeling. This can look like Mr./Ms. Cool, Calm, Collected versus the Hysteric. (Up side is a balance between your head and heart goals, satisfying both your mind and your emotions.)

Inward/Outward

If one of you is the introvert and the other the extrovert; if one of you is very public and reveals almost anything while the other is private and keeps a lot inside--this polarity is probably active. (Up side is the capacity to balance outer stimulation and inner seeking.)

Lighthearted/Serious

If one of you jokes easily and has a casual attitude about life, while the other takes things seriously, you're probably focused on this polarity. (Up side is knowing when to labor and when to laugh; when to be dedicated and when to the thumb the nose at your world and just relax.)

Logic (rationality)/Intuition

If one of you overdoes logic, rational objectivity, while the other carries intuition and "vibes" to an extreme, you're working on this polarity. (Up side is checking facts and fancies; gathering as much information as possible but being able to make the "leap of faith" where knowledge is insufficient.)

Past/Future

One of you may be more sentimental, concerned with what has gone before, while the other is more visionary, looking ahead toward the future. (Up side is learning from the past while creating for the future.)

Lighthearted/Serious

If one of you jokes easily and has a casual attitude about life, while the other takes things seriously, you're probably focused on this polarity. (Up side is knowing when to labor and when to laugh; when to be dedicated and when to the thumb the nose at your world and just relax.)

Personal/Transpersonal

The two of you could feel torn between devoting time and energy to personal desires and needs versus getting involved with the wider world, fighting for a cause or doing something for humanity. (Up side is a strong sense of self balanced with a commitment to leaving the world a better place.)

Quantity/Quality (Scatter/Focus)

Are you torn between trying to learn, absorb and do everything in your relationship versus focusing thoroughly, deeply and completely on few, central areas? (Up side is the ability to discuss anything, get to the essentials and probe deeply when needed.)

Student/Teacher

Do you fall into student/teacher roles without trading sides? Is one person supplying all the wisdom and answers while the other takes the position of humble, eager learner? If so, you are probably working on this polarity. (Up side is lots of mental stimulation; both of you enjoy learning from each other as well as life.)

Personal/Transpersonal

The two of you could feel torn between devoting time and energy to personal desires and needs versus getting involved with the wider world, fighting for a cause or doing something for humanity. (Up side is a strong sense of self balanced with a commitment to leaving the world a better place.)

Physical/Spiritual or Material/Ethical

Do the two of you feel torn between the material and the spiritual, between enjoying the physical realm and seeking higher meaning and truth? (Up side is a balance between the body and the soul.)

Real/Ideal

Do you polarize between the quest for infinite love and beauty (search for a dream) versus a pragmatic focus on what is possible in the world. Is one the mystic and the other the materialist? (Up side is a vision to pursue and the practicality to discern the necessary steps to turn your visions into reality.)

Quantity/Quality (Scatter/Focus)

Are you torn between trying to learn, absorb and do everything in your relationship versus focusing thoroughly, deeply and completely on few, central areas? (Up side is the ability to discuss anything, get to the essentials and probe deeply when needed.)

Stability/Risk (Security/Change)

You may find yourselves feeling torn between concentrating on the safe, secure and familiar versus venturing into unknown territory, taking chances, adventuring and exploring. Perhaps one of you seems a stick-in-the-mud, while the other appears rash, reckless and foolhardy. (Up side is ability to judge when to pioneer and move forward and when to consolidate your gains and continue the present course.)

Student/Teacher

Do you fall into student/teacher roles without trading sides? Is one person supplying all the wisdom and answers while the other takes the position of humble, eager learner? If so, you are probably working on this polarity. (Up side is lots of mental stimulation; both of you enjoy learning from each other as well as life.)

Section Five: Strengths

Every relationship also has certain basic strengths embedded within it. Some of these are indicated by the element focus (e.g., fire, earth, air, water, or a combination of these elements). In this section, bold-italic type indicates the element of fire (extraverted, confident, expressive, needing to pour out). Boldface type indicates the element of earth (practical, grounded, seeking tangible results). Italic type indicates the element of air (objective, detached, mental). Normal type symbolizes the element of water (sensitive, emotional, intuitive). Paragraphs with type faces that alternate from one line to the next show element combinations: fire/water, fire/air, fire/earth, earth/air, earth/water or air/water.

Your association has been analyzed in terms of the predominant element(s) in the interactions between your horoscopes. The elements focused for each of you are listed--and will be different with different relatives.

In addition, certain contacts between your charts point to strengths you both can draw on (such as caring, communication skills, etc.). Those contacts and the positive potentials they symbolize are listed here as well. Those strengths are always relevant for both people. Use this section as a summary and reminder of some of the assets you stimulate in each other.

Elements Emphasized for Orion

Water

Psychic connection, compassion, inner wisdom, imagination, sensitive to inner feelings of self and others, urge to merge/unite, automatic pilot.

Earth/Water

Helpful, supportive, nurturant in practical ways, protective and preserving, faithful, stable, security-seeking, empathic pragmatism.

Air/Water

Able to verbalize unconscious needs of self and others, imaginative, can use logic and intuition, visualizer, dreamer, rich inner world.

Elements Emphasized for Lilith

Fire/Earth

Accomplishment-orientation, effectiveness, endurance, capacity to impact the world, can both start and finish projects, makes things happen.

Strengths for Orion and Lilith

Communication Skills

You two know how to talk to one another, how to listen, and truly HEAR what the other person wants and needs.

Fairness/Equality

The two of you are willing to compromise, to look for win/win solutions which please you both.

Unconscious Understanding

You sometimes understand one another without words, tuning into each other on a deep, emotional level. You pick up information intuitively.

Money/Material Resources

The two of you can combine forces well in terms of financial matters and handling the material world.

Nurturing Skills

You both can be caring, protective and helpful of one another. Family connections or activities may be important to you both.

Personal Growth (Individuality)

You can encourage one another toward growth and change. You are likely to support each other's need to be unique individuals.

Responsibility

You support each other's sense of responsibility and desire to do what is right and what is necessary.

Vision

You encourage each other to dream, to imagine, to reach for a higher purpose in life.
