

COMPLETE PLANETARY PROFILE

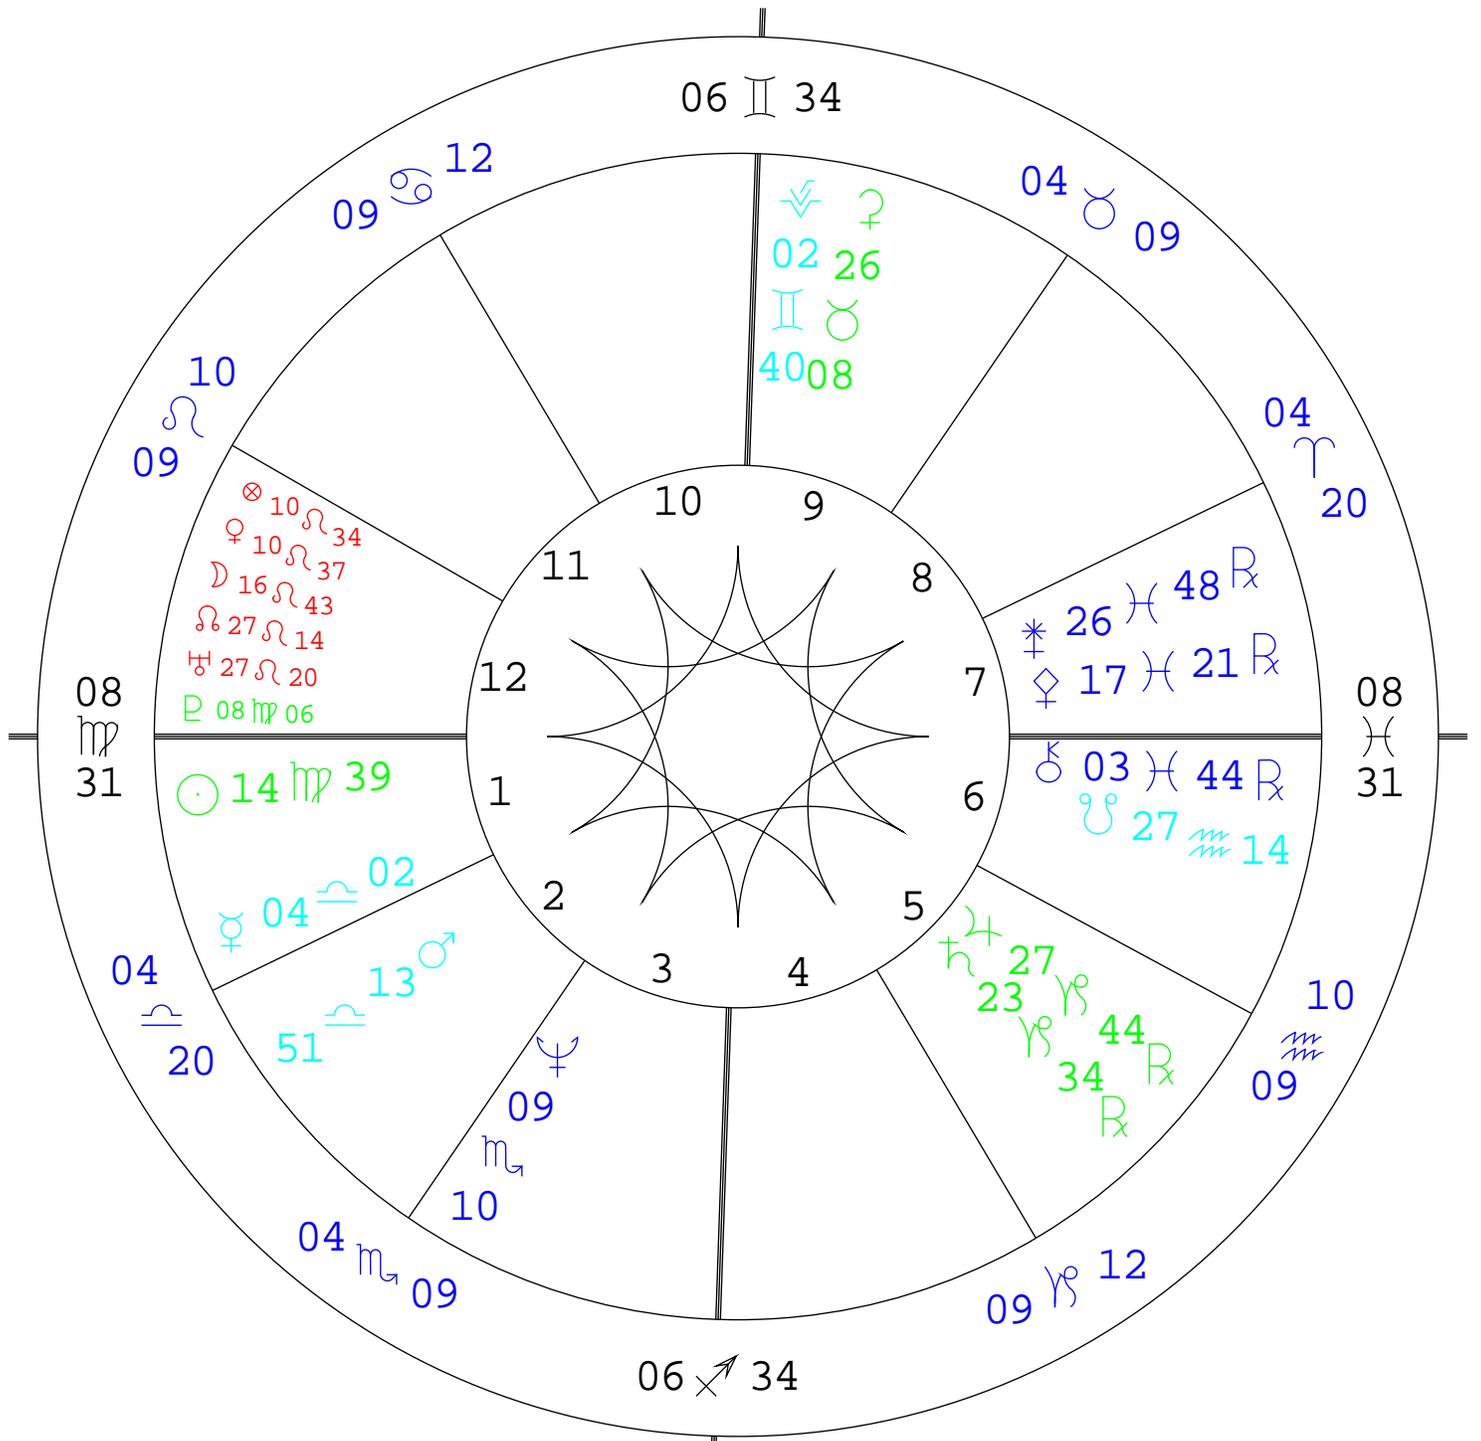

Text by Maritha Pottenger
Sexuality Section by Jalien Shandler
Programming by Rique Pottenger

COMPLETE PLANETARY PROFILE

Chloe Armand

Born on Sep 7, 1961 at 6h 2m 0s
Zone 8.00 DAYLIGHT time
San Diego, CA 32N42 117W 9
Placidus cusps Tropical zodiac
Run on 1/16/1 21 35

Sun in Virgo
Moon in Leo
Virgo Rising (Ascendant sign)

NATAL CHART

Chloe Armand
 7 Sep 1961 6h 2m 0s PDT
 San Diego, CA
 Placidus 32N42 117W 9

OVERVIEW.....Page 1

Emphasis on Mutability
Emphasis on Fire/Earth
Your twelfth house is strongly occupied.
Leo is strongly occupied in your horoscope.
Virgo is strongly occupied in your horoscope.
Mutable T-square
In a Gauquelin Sector: ♃ ♀
Repeated Freedom Theme.
Repeated Competence Theme.
Repeated Organized Theme.
Repeated Artistic Theme.
Repeated Risk-taking Theme.
Repeated Power Theme.
Repeated Transpersonal Theme.

BASIC IDENTITY.....Page 4

"I think, conceptualize and communicate."
"I pursue a deeper understanding of myself and life."

WORK.....Page 5

The Solo Worker
Working Logically
Moon's Nodes across 6th - 12th or Virgo - Pisces

PARENTS.....Page 6

Family Pride
Facing Ideals and Expectations
Balancing Emotional and Physical Caretaking

MIND & COMMUNICATION.....Page 8

The Diplomat
Intuitive Understanding

CHILDREN AND CREATIVITY..... Page 9

Up, Up and Away!
Success Equals Power
Parents
Moon's Nodes across 5th - 11th or Leo - Aquarius

RELATIONSHIPS..... Page 11

Assertion Versus Accommodation--Owning Your Own Power
Fantasy?
Moon's Nodes across 5th - 11th or Leo - Aquarius

BELIEFS..... Page 14

A Zest for Life
The Pragmatist
Moon's Nodes across 6th - 12th or Virgo - Pisces

SEXUALITY.....Page 15

The Active Lover
The Dream Lover
Moon's Nodes across 5th - 11th or Leo - Aquarius

MONEY..... Page 17

The Free Spender
Financial Faith
Personal

KARMIC.....Page 18

Faith, Trust and Beliefs
The element of Fire is emphasized.
The quality of Mutability is emphasized.
Fire/Earth
Emotions/Intellect Polarity
Mental

FUTURE..... Page 19

Go For It!
Truth Seeking
Facing the "Real World"
If It Feels Good, Do It!

APPENDIX..... At End

ASTRO KEYS (key words & symbol explanations)
INTRODUCTION (more information about the Profile)
HEALTH (Astrological correlates to physical problems)

OVERVIEW

Please be sure to read the enclosed (typeset) INTRODUCTION to your Planetary Profile before reading your analysis. The INTRODUCTION will clarify certain terms and concepts used within. Thank you!

The quality of Mutability is prominent in your chart (considering planets and occupied houses as well as signs).

Flexible, adaptable and able to bend with the circumstances of life, you learn mostly through reading, talking or observing others. Rather than suffer the "slings and arrows of outrageous fortune," you can watch someone else go through an emotional storm and learn vicariously what to do and what not to do.

Mental, you tend to be interested in everything and everyone and can consequently be very scattered if you do not deliberately set priorities and choose a few things to do well, rather than trying to do it all. Often setting very high standards, you may pursue the "impossible dream" in certain areas, or set yourself up for chronic disappointment by wanting more than is reachable. Examine your expectations.

Usually bright, your mind is a tool for handling the world.

The element combination Fire/Earth is emphasized in your chart.

Think of molten lava; that is an appropriate image for you. Fiery yet enduring, you can be incredibly productive. Usually able to outlast everyone around you, you are capable of grounding your creative inspirations and ending up with very real accomplishments. Able to initiate as well as carry through, you are usually out in the world, making things happen, and often noticed for it.

If carried to an extreme, this behavior can lead to scorched earth. You may sometimes be so intent on doing what you feel is necessary, you steamroller yourself or other people into an end result that is not satisfying. Beware of your goals; you are likely to achieve them.

There is some inner conflict between the fire and the earth. Fire pushes for spontaneity and direct, immediate action. Earth demands forethought, planning and deliberate action. One side of your nature values doing what you want most highly; another side values productivity and accomplishments. If the fire side wins out, you will exhibit more drive, enthusiasm, directness, energy, seeking of excitement and living life the way you want it. If the earth side wins out, you will exhibit more perseverance, caution, hard work, material focus and practical achievements.

This is THE most productive combination of elements if integrated.

Your twelfth house is strongly occupied.

Your faith in life is crucial here. If you trust in yourself and a Higher Power, you are likely to be extremely effective, living out most of your potential. If you are trying carry the whole load yourself (playing God) or expecting others to make everything perfect for you, disillusionment and disappointment lie ahead. Beauty and spiritual, idealistic or religious activities offer support.

Leo is strongly occupied in your horoscope.

Excitement draws you; you seek that adrenaline high. You may look to physically risky activities such as motorcycling or taking chances financially through speculation and gambling. With an urge to pour out from your own center, doing more than has been done before, you can be highly creative in many areas. Positive feedback (love, admiration, attention, applause) is important to you. Sometimes, you may decline to try things because you fear being laughed at and cannot stand losing. A natural leader, you would prefer to be onstage, swaying people emotionally--as long as you are assured of a positive response.

Virgo is strongly occupied in your horoscope.

Health and/or work are important focuses for you. You may combine them in fields of nutrition, medicine, holistic health or even professional hypochondria. You have marvelous abilities to analyze, discriminate and find the flaws. This can make you a super employee, a marvelously productive person or a critical pain in the neck, depending on where you channel your desire to improve life and make it more efficient.

The characterization of an aspect configuration as to element or quality is based on a weighted combination of the nature of the planets and houses (as well as the signs) involved in the configuration.

You have a T-square emphasizing the following quality:

Mutable--

This configuration symbolizes inner ambivalence in areas of faith, trust, values and goals. You are likely to be multitasked and initially experience difficulty in settling down to one or two options. You may be scattered for a time, trying to keep up with a multiplicity of interests. Perfectionism may very well be a challenge. Whether directed toward yourself (wanting never to make a mistake) or other people (searching for the perfect parent, partner, child, etc.), demanding more than is possible from human beings sets us up for disillusionment and disappointment.

Faith and values are often an important area to examine. Unless your priorities are clear, it is easy to feel scattered or overextended with your fingers in too many pies. You may experience a lack of faith, needing to develop confidence in yourself or trust in a Higher Power. You may exhibit too much faith--grandiose or simply rash in your actions. This placement points to the need to develop clear priorities, a firm and grounded belief system and goals which are reachable.

GAUQUELIN SECTORS

Two of the foremost researchers of astrology, Michel and Francoise Gauquelin, have discovered certain character traits associated with the planets in various positions in the horoscope. These positions the Gauquelins have named "zones of power." You have one or more planets in such a "zone of power." The associated descriptive words for likely character traits are: charitable, comical, a dreamer, has facility, funny, gay (as in merry), generous, hot tempered, often in a group, humorous, has lightness, loves nature, lyrical, mystical, naive, poetic, religious, sentimental, susceptible to influences, witty, worldly, youthful.

Moon

Venus

benevolent, a dandy, has facility, gracious, greathearted, great beauty, often in love, scandalous, successful, youthful.

REPEATED THEMES

What is most important in your nature is repeated (in various ways) in your horoscope. Themes which emerge again and again point to major issues in your life. In this section, we discuss themes which are significant in your overall nature and/or in more than one life area (that is, relationships, career, identity, etc.). When a theme is repeated in your horoscope we indicate the life areas in which it is most relevant. (When astrological annotation is requested, the annotation for the repeated theme appears in each relevant life area.)

Freedom

This theme indicates a strong inner urge for freedom and independence. You may feel an intense need to be yourself, original, unique and not like anyone else. You probably like going your own way, and may be reluctant to be tied down. You may seek liberty and avoid restrictions or even commitments. Depending on the life areas most involved, this freedom theme could manifest mainly in terms of work (often self-employed, or with a boss who does not closely supervise, or quitting or getting fired from the frustrations of feeling hemmed in vocationally, or choosing fields with lots of activity, variety, newness, challenge, innovation and self-direction), in beliefs (resistant to other people's beliefs and values, unwilling to accept any dogmas, oriented toward openness and exploration of ideas) or other areas.

If relationships are involved, you might manifest a need for space yourself (footloose and fancy-free, unconventional relationships, being involved with more than one person, associations that allow each person to do his or her "own thing"); attract partners who manifest it for you ("free souls" unwilling to commit, perennial bachelors or bachelorettes, individuals who need a lot of space); or become involved in situations where some "separateness" is inevitable (e.g., long-distance relationships, falling in love with married people or being attracted to people of the opposite sexual orientation or people who are somehow not available). Remaining friends with a partner, each allowing the other much flexibility and openness, leaves room for intimacy as well as independence. This option is also advisable with kids when the life area of children is connected to freedom themes.

"No one is an island," but people do vary in their needs for independence. Each of us must choose when, where and how much to express our needs for liberty and doing our own thing in the world.

The Freedom theme is particularly marked, for you, in the areas of Sexuality, Money and Growth Areas.

Work/Competence

This theme revolves around the need to be efficient, practical, productive, sensible and to work successfully in the world. Part of the drive here is toward searching for flaws, in order to improve the current situation. The tendency is toward a critical, judgmental attitude, with the focus on cool calculation and logic.

The flaw-finding lens highlighted here is oriented toward discovering what is wrong, in order to fix it and make it better. Talent for repairs of all kinds is likely. This can be extremely valuable on the job or whenever the orientation is toward the physical world and a task of some kind. However, if this critical analysis is channeled against people, it can be problem. Whether the issue is self-criticism (if mixed with the identity area), criticism in close relationships (from others toward you, from you toward others, or both), the danger is that a focus on what is wrong will create barriers in the closeness and caring between people. (This could also be true with parents, with children, etc.) Nitpicking can be overdone. Sharing tasks works very well--a joint focus (in relationships) on improving things. This could include family businesses (when mixed with children or relationships), meeting people through work, or loved ones who express an intense drive for competence.

You could end up doing more than your share in areas where this theme is highlighted. You can be quite dedicated, disciplined and efficient and might slip into a workaholic role. (When this theme is mixed with life areas pertaining to other people, they might also overdo the drive for competence, efficiency and getting the job done well.) Alternately, you might be so concerned with getting things RIGHT that you keep on refining and improving things, so have trouble completing projects. You might never be quite satisfied, never quite willing to declare yourself finished, because some tiny flaw yet remains.

You tend to feel highly responsible where this theme is prominent, and end up in the position of being "indispensable." If this is overdone, you could find yourself surrounded by weaker and more incompetent people as you overdo your need to be capable, efficient and useful. Alternately, if you do not feel productive, illness could be an unconscious escape from feeling guilty for not accomplishing what you feel you "ought" to. (Illness can also be the body's only route to making a workaholic take a "vacation.") Your feelings about your productivity and efficiency, your ability to be useful and make a contribution, are profoundly connected to your health.

As long as the flaw-finding qualities indicated by this theme are positively channeled, you can be tremendously effective, pragmatic, dedicated and responsible. You have the capacity to make a real contribution.

In your chart, the life areas highlighted by this theme are Children/Creativity and Future.

Organized

This theme shows the potential for depth, concentration, obsessiveness, concern with details, thoroughness and perseverance. This theme can indicate talent for research, graduate school, business, or any activity that requires a careful, painstaking and disciplined approach. However, if too much obsessiveness is channeled into relationships (you or a partner having to have things "just so"); or with children (trying to make them over; you or a child being compulsive and demanding); or toward the self (obsessing over every little "error"), there can be a problem.

Organizational skills can be a real asset when channeled effectively into work efforts, mental concentration, fix-it projects or other physical tasks. They need to be handled with a bit of care when involved with people areas.

Endurance, followthrough, stability and commitment are likely where this theme is prominent. (If overdone, this can lead to hanging on too long, never forgetting or being stuck in the mud.) Precision and careful planning are likely assets. You may be skilled at putting all the pieces together. You can be extremely dedicated.

The Organizational theme is particularly strong, for you, in the life areas of Basic Identity and Beliefs.

Artistic

The theme of beauty/aesthetics is strong in your horoscope. This can refer to both creation and appreciation of beauty. This includes tactile forms of beauty (e.g., sculpture, fabrics, pottery, landscape gardening, etc.), visual arts (e.g., architecture, design, photography, printing, graphics, fashion, modeling, etc.) and creative efforts or anything which gains emotional response, admiration, approval or applause.

If carried too far, there could be an excessive concern with appearances, an overdeveloped need for pleasure and beauty (and avoidance of conflict), or a passive approach to life which waits for someone or something else to make everything lovely. If personal responsibility is accepted, you are likely to both appreciate and create beauty in some form in the world.

It is important to remember that this theme is not just the traditional "arts." A meal can be work of art; one can sew beautiful clothes, or work with nature's beauty in many forms. A feeling for harmony, grace and balance is quite possible.

In relationships, these themes can be shared, or you might attract people who are good-looking or artistic--or look to love to be beautiful, flowing, comfortable and harmonious. If either person expects too much from the other (partner, parent, child, lover, etc.) in terms of appearance, or sweetness, disillusionment is likely. No one is always agreeable, accommodating, sweet, kind, loving, etc. However, you can truly "make beautiful music together" if the themes of grace and harmony are shared and each person makes a contribution to creating a more loving relationship.

This Artistic theme is particularly emphasized in terms of your Mind/Communication and Relationships.

Risk

This theme highlights a willingness to take risks, to speculate, to take chances in hopes of a bigger pay-off. Variety and the new tend to appeal. Excitement is a draw, with an urge to thrust out into the world and create. You are willing to live on the edge, to "go for it," to risk in order to gain a desired reward, to push forward into unknown territory.

Depending on the areas of the horoscope involved, you may exhibit risk-taking more on a physical (identity, creativity), mental (mind, beliefs), emotional (relationships) or spiritual (beliefs) level. You might "gamble" with money, goods, love, resources, possessions, ideas, projects, etc. You may be creative or pioneering more in terms of relationships, work or other areas. (When tied to life areas symbolizing other people, they may express, or even overdo, this theme for you.)

If carried to an extreme, this theme can denote rashness, foolishness and a life of constant chaos. Yet, being alive requires risk and changes. You are willing to step "off the edge" for the chance of something bigger, better, more exciting, more alive and interesting. You are likely to play the odds (or even go against the odds), to expand your options, to broaden your horizons and "go for the gusto" in life. You want to do MORE than has been done before and will take nonstandard, independent and uncertain routes to achieve that. You thrive on zest, enthusiasm, optimism and trust in the future. Expansive, creative and progressive, you are willing to go beyond old limits.

The willingness to take risks is particularly highlighted in the life areas of Work, Parents, Children/Creativity and Growth Areas.

Power

This theme highlights a drive for control, authority and the need for an impact on the world. This might be directed into competitive business, competitive sports or power struggles with other people (parents, children, partners, etc.). There is an urge to fight, to win, to master, to overcome, to dominate, to be on top. Fighting for a worthy cause is another option.

When a power drive is present in life areas pertaining to other people, the need is to share the power, to impulse for mastery. Otherwise, one individual may overdo to the point of being dictatorial and authoritarian. You could find yourself fighting, arguing and engaging in direct (or manipulative) power struggles with those near and dear to you. Competition could win over cooperation. There is nothing wrong with power per se; what matters is what we do with it--where we channel it. Forcefulness can be very valuable in certain arenas. Where this drive is featured, you need a constructive outlet for pushing, striving, winning, and running things the way you want them. Find ways to "win" together with other people. Set up win/win situations where relationships are concerned and avoid win/lose choices.

A sense of control and mastery may be very important to you--whether over your mind, your own body, your work, your finances, etc.

Your power drive is most noticeable (astrologically) in the life areas of Parents, Children/Creativity and Future.

Transpersonal

This theme highlights your relationship with the world at large. The focus is on issues of the greatest good for the greatest number, relating to the establishment, to society, to people as groups rather than as individuals. Here we face ideas and ideals, long-range goals, handling of global perspectives, an awareness of history and an ability to see the whole.

A wider perspective can be very valuable in working with large issues and concerns, but the aloofness of the overview can be a drawback if carried into too much of the life. Concern for the world as a whole and its problems must be balanced with personal needs and interpersonal sharing. This theme emphasizes a sense of connection to something beyond the personal self. This could be to humanity, to God, to a political or social cause, or simply a sense of unity with Life.

You may be drawn to politics, to metaphysics, to education, group action, new-age occupations, economics or anything which gives you a sense of higher purpose or meaning. Your involvement with humanitarian principles, ideals, or broad, societal issues could affect your work, your finances, your relationships, etc.

If other people are part of the picture (parents, children, partners, etc.), you are blending relationships with the wider world. This could lead to associations which leave their mark on the world (such as through friendships, groups, organizations, social causes) or careers such as counseling, politics, etc. You could expand or stretch relationships so that they encompass more inclusive issues and concerns than just the two of you. This could include fighting for justice together, or other options. If significant others express the transpersonal theme for you, they might seem too caught up in making history, changing the world, or looking at the big picture, to really relate to you. You might feel neglected, or in second place to humanity, or BIG issues. The challenge is to blend people-sharing with the need to see the larger overview of life.

The transpersonal theme is particularly emphasized, in your horoscope, in the areas of Parents, Children/Creativity, Growth Areas and Future.

BASIC IDENTITY

This area of the horoscope reflects your basic sense of self, your way of being in the world. It may seem particularly apropos of your younger self as it ties into your early self-expression, your spontaneous actions, the way you came into life, the reactions and interactions which come most naturally to you. As you grow and evolve, you modify and overlay these basic tendencies. But the themes, in some permutation, remain.

"I think, conceptualize and communicate."

Your mind is your primary identification. You see yourself as a thinking, communicating person. Curiosity is generally strong and you are drawn to learn (and often talk) about almost anything. The intellect is generally sharp. You may use words as a weapon and usually think on your feet. Debate and extemporaneous speeches come quite naturally to you.

A sibling or other collateral relative (aunt, uncle, cousin) could have been a role model for you. Role models can be positive or negative; we may want to be similar to that person, or we may want to be the exact opposite. If there was such a role model, the person taught you (through doing it right OR through doing it wrong) about mental quickness, communications and the ability to think logically. Whether we get the positive or negative model, the learning is there for us.

Verbal skills are often marked with this combination. Some people may find you TOO articulate. Easily bored, you prefer to avoid routines and seek constant mental stimulation and challenges to stretch your mind. Ideas and concepts excite you.

"I pursue a deeper understanding of myself and life."

Probing beneath the surface comes naturally to you. Eschewing superficialities, you tend to question and examine, rarely accepting the first response, but searching for root causes and issues. Your relentless delving into motivations is as much self-directed as other-directed. You tend to play therapist to yourself continually, wondering, questioning, examining and digging at your desires, needs, wishes. You seek a sense of self-mastery and can even go to extremes of self-denial if you feel that is the path to self-control.

An intense ambivalence lies within you. Some of your deepest learning and truest understanding is gained through relationships, especially with a mate. Learning to give, receive and share pleasures, money, sexuality and material possessions is an essential part of your evolution. Yet, you also have a great need for alone time--to search within, to process, to work over things in your mind and gut. You may feel torn between the roles of aesthetic withdrawal versus sensual sharing.

The issue of power compels you. Analyzing and understanding your power, the power of others is central to your search. Differentiating between power over people, over emotions, over sensuality, is part of the struggle. You may engage in power struggles, often drawing intense, strong people into your life in order to trigger your own power-oriented potentials and learn through the confrontation. Indirect power-seeking--manipulation, whether through guilt, tears, threats, etc.--can also be an arena for coming to terms with who you are and how you wish to relate to others, especially those with whom you are most intimate.

Gifted with the potential for much focus and concentration, you can exhibit a bulldog tenacity, relentlessly pursuing your objectives to the end. Because you can be systematic, organized and thorough, your talents often shine in the business world or any arena calling for thoroughness, discipline and careful attention.

The following are shorthand summaries of the mixtures of themes (discussed above) involved in your identity:

...an inner conflict between skimming the surface and probing the depths; need to choose when to be a butterfly and when to be a miner.

This section addresses the issue of integration--blending your needs for self-assertion with other fundamental motivations.

Some basic drives flow easily together, but we must avoid carrying them to excess. Other drives conflict with one another, but add to our versatility once we make room for both in life.

Your sense of identity and natural self-expression tends to flow easily with your yearning for something Higher in life. Your faith and trust in the universe affirm your personal self-expression. Your sense of harmony with the infinite aids your courage and self-confidence.

WORK

This section addresses your handling of the physical, material world. This includes some kind of job, career, means of earning a living or area of competence. This section also looks at your orientation toward the "real" (physical) world.

Astrology does not say you would be uniquely suited for one specific career; most people have aptitudes in a number of different areas. Astrology mirrors inner motivations and drives which function best in certain kinds of fields, certain working environments. Knowing ourselves better enables us to choose careers which are most fully satisfying.

The Solo Worker

"I'll do it MY way!" is your song. You function best in situations where you can do your own thing. Owning your own business is excellent, but you can also do well running your own division or section of a larger company. Basically, you need room in your job to work undisturbed. You tend to do your best when on your own. Having other people around is just a distraction and you usually dislike taking orders from anyone else.

You have a pioneering spirit and can operate well in a trailblazing capacity. Your courage and willingness to lay it on the line can break into territory where others fear to tread. If carried too far, of course, these qualities can indicate rashness, impulsivity and a self-centered drive to have everything on your own terms.

Physical activity is important; you should not settle for a job where you sit at a desk all day. You need some movement and changes of scene. You do not enjoy repetition. You are at your best when doing something ONCE and then moving on to new areas to conquer. If you are out of touch with your own strength, assertion and independence, you may find yourself surrounded by co-workers and bosses who are aggressive, argumentative, selfish and iconoclastic and who pick fights. Anger could be an issue on the job.

Potential talents include mechanical ability, medical skills, sports, the "killer instinct" for competitive fields and a high energy level for working at what YOU want to do.

Working Logically

You work best with your mind. Thinking and communicating is your forte. Curious and eager to learn more, you are best off in a field which offers a lot of variety--either something new and different to learn all the time, or new people to meet, or new places to go and see. You may handle a lot of paperwork, mail or phone calls. "Busy-ness" is natural to you and a career in commerce is quite possible. Your interests are varied and you may be overextended, trying to do too many things. Multiple careers are not uncommon (sequentially or even juggling two or three at one time).

Physical labor is not your style. Ideas and people offer a forum for your talents. You have a facility for language and relating to others which can express in numerous fields. Possibilities range from the skilled secretary, receptionist, telephone operator to the professor, teacher (from elementary school to college), writer, lecturer, salesperson, songwriter, etc. Fairly often, this combination symbolizes good coordination and fine eye-mind-hand dexterity which is useful for tasks as varied as typing, playing a musical instrument, the professional magician, hairdresser, surgeon, dealer in Las Vegas, etc. A skilled voice is another potential asset. Sometimes the work involves other family members, such as brothers, sisters, aunts, uncles, cousins and so on.

You are able to be flexible in your work, easily moving from one project to another. You do not take anything too seriously, being able to detach and view the whole situation objectively. This attitude, if overdone, could become flippant and careless. If you are out of touch with this side of your nature, your colleagues and/or boss might seem cool, scattered, superficial, gossipy, flighty or talkative. Your light touch, objective, detached mental approach and easy camaraderie with those around you generally make for work full of information exchange and sociability.

The following are brief synopses of the combinations of issues (delineated above) involved in your career options:

...a flexible approach to the job and strong need for variety in the working environment and tasks; much energy for communication, information exchange. Coordination and dexterity may be excellent.

Moon's Nodes across 6th - 12th or Virgo - Pisces

You are probably balancing the real and the ideal in terms of your work. The combination can be a restless one, with the potential of you going from job to job in search of a more ideal situation. One potential is the search for a perfect career, with resultant frustration and disillusionment with the flaws of each position you take. Another possibility is getting caught up in the desire to perform your work perfectly, without any mistakes. That is a hopeless task as we are all human.

Feelings of inadequacy can complicate the struggle. If you are excessively hard on yourself, you may stop before you even start, afraid to attempt ANY work situation as you feel sure you would NOT perform perfectly. Or, you can be needlessly self-critical when you make mistakes, unable to fill the role of saint. Or, you could decide to wait UNTIL you find the perfect job, or until you know you can do everything ideally and never accomplish anything!

Other alternatives include some kind of blend of your need to be competent and capable with your desire to do something higher, more ideal, more beautiful. This can include working in fields involving beauty or aesthetics in some fashion. It can encompass helping/healing work or any job which leaves the world a better place than it was previously. Your work needs to MEAN something to you. A job which is simply a job will be frustrating to you.

The challenge is to ground your ideals, so that you can feel you are beautifying or improving the world in some way, uplifting our current state of existence, but also getting some concrete, real-world results in what you do.

GAUQUELIN SECTORS

The research of Michel and Francoise Gauquelin uncovered certain planetary placements as significant (in odds many times against chance) for those highly successful in various professions. This does not mean that every person who does very well in a given profession has that placement. Nor does it mean that every person having a particular planetary placement automatically pursues a certain career. It does mean that achieving people in those careers have that configuration much more often than would be predicted by chance.

Your Moon is in the configuration discovered by the Gauquelins in charts of successful writers and politicians.

This section addresses the issue of integration--blending your needs for productive accomplishment with other fundamental motivations.

Your desire to be productive, make money and handle the physical world may be at odds with your desire to tune into the infinite in some fashion. Your idealism may be at odds with the work you do. Perhaps you feel that the pragmatics and the ethics of your career clash. Perhaps your vision of something ultimately lovely conflicts with your practical, everyday duties. Faith and fear may war with one another over the appropriate approach to take. Integrate your discipline and thoroughness on the job with your inspiration and inner wisdom for best results.

PARENTS

A horoscope does NOT show your parents. Rather, it reflects the issues you faced with your parents. If you had siblings, they may have experienced the same set of parents very differently. That difference will be reflected in your charts. Each of us is unique, and children ELICIT behavior from parents just as much as they RESPOND to parental actions. No one else has quite the same relationship to your parents as you do. The horoscope reveals the opportunities for learning available in the interaction of you and your parents. It does not determine that these associations were positive or negative. (For most of us, it is a mixture of positive and negative, anyway.) But it reveals what our parents were teaching us--through either doing it well (showing us what TO do) or doing it so poorly (showing us what NOT to do) that we, hopefully, did better.

Projection is often an issue with parents (as with anyone we are close to). Because parents ARE generally role models, their job is to teach us about certain potentials, to demonstrate for us some of our own inner qualities--often before we have fully developed them. The danger is that we may experience these qualities as existing ONLY in our parents and deny their potential within us (until we can appreciate the positive potential also available).

This report will discuss parental archetypes in terms of your experience. We cannot determine (for sure) which parents played each role, whether they shared the roles, switched, or one parent did several. Nor will adoptive parents be distinguished from blood parents. The themes indicated involve the people playing parental roles--regardless of their particular blood relationship to you. The horoscope shows the issues you face(d) with your parental figures, the learning that was/is a focus. While reading, remember that the "parent" you learned (interacted) the most with could have been an actual parent, a grandparent, elder sibling, long-term babysitter, nanny, impressive neighbor or other individual. The "parent" in your horoscope is not necessarily the birth parent.

One must also remember that even after our parents are no longer physically present, we all have an internalized parent. This is part of our conscience. Too often, we react blindly to that internal parent, still replaying old tapes, old reactions, old ways of being with our parents--long after they are gone. Part of the discrimination of adulthood is determining what we wish to keep of our parents and what is not useful for us.

Family Pride

Charisma, dynamism, excitement and a starring role were in some way a focus with one of your parents. This can range from a parent who was always "onstage," seeking attention, admiration and applause, to a parent who was a wonderful fan club, approving of all you did and encouraging you to constantly surpass yourself. When exaggerated, one potential is a self-centered parent who seemed unable to share the spotlight with anyone else, who was childish in their determination to have fun and achieve adulation the way they wanted it. When this theme is shared, both you and the parent are able to be important, have your place in the sun and enjoy the response and appreciation of others.

This theme puts a major focus on the need to love and be loved. Often there is a very deep bond between parents and children, plus a strong instinct within you to establish a family of your own. The need to give and receive love is strong.

Facing Ideals and Expectations

One or both parents are role models in the search for the truth or for something more in life. This can be a parent who is highly religious, spiritual or dedicated to science, education and searching for answers. Another option is a parent who believes s/he is perfect and has a right to whatever s/he wants in life.

Freedom needs are often important to one or both parents. Such a parent may simply be gone a lot, perhaps traveling. The parent may come across as detached and not really involved, so the child creates his/her idealized version of how that parent should be--or what the parent would be like if s/he had actually been around.

Another alternative is a mutually idealistic relationship--where you each look up to and admire the other--OR a mutually disillusioning relationship--where you both feel hurt and let down when the other party turns out NOT to be perfect, to have flaws, to be less than godlike. You may expect more than is reasonable from this parent and the parent may never be satisfied with you.

Of course, sharing the quest for ultimate answers is another option. Together, with this parent, you could travel, attend classes, teach, study, seek the meaning of the Universe.

The theme is dealing with expectations, goals, values and belief systems through your relationships with your parent(s).

Balancing Emotional and Physical Caretaking

This is a mother/father blend. It can manifest in several ways in the external sense. One potential is a parent who played both roles: a mother who was both nurturing and dominant; a father who was both responsible and warm; a parent who was responsible for being both mother and father to you. Another possibility is parents who were alike, both sharing qualities, with no sharp distinctions between them. Their roles could have overlapped. Mother did some of the outer world work, responsibility and realism; father did some of the nurturance, support and emotional caretaking. In some way, the parental archetypes are being blended.

The combination of conditional with unconditional love can manifest in several ways. One potential is parents that overdid the conditional side; they were harsh, judgmental, critical more than warm and caring. Sometimes this is simply a difficult childhood, where everyone had to work, where everyone was realistic, effective, etc. One variation is parenting your own parents, feeling you had to be the strong, responsible one, that everything rested on your shoulders. Another potential is parents that overdid the unconditional love side; they were extremely nurturing and protective, doing so much for their children that the children never had to develop much strength or responsibility on their own. Mommy or Daddy always did it. Yet another possibility is parents that were able to be unconditional in their expression of love when you were young--to build up your trust in the world and your sense of self-esteem--and the parents made the transition to conditional love as you got older. With age, you expected to meet certain demands, follow certain rules and regulations of society, deal with people's roles.

The following are abbreviated descriptions of the mixtures of qualities (discussed above) being faced through your parent(s):

A parent or parents role modeled themes of energy, action, vitality, charisma and courage. Their desire for excitement could have led them to some risk-taking activities. They were probably restless and eager to keep moving. If they overdid these themes, they could have been careless, overly optimistic, foolhardy and carried away with grand schemes and dreams of an impractical nature. They might have come across as simply self-centered and solely intent on doing what they wanted to do.

Your parents had a drive for power, authority and control. If handled wisely, they provided a role model for having an impact in the world. A less comfortable lesson could have involved power struggles with them, learning your own strength through combat and competition. Success and winning would be a major value.

Your parents were capable of seeing the big picture. They had an awareness of larger issues and influenced your world view, your perception of reality. Inclined to expect a lot, they could have achieved many dreams or lived perennially frustrated because nothing was as ideal as they wished.

This section addresses the issue of integration--blending your needs for dependency, nurturance, responsibility and control with other fundamental motivations.

Please bear in mind that those portions of the horoscope which refer to your mother or mother figure also refer to your own ability to mother, to care for, to nurture and to be nurtured. Potential harmony or conflict with a mother figure points first to INNER harmony or conflict with your caretaking capacities. Issues with a mother figure may repeat those themes with which you are dealing on an inner level: balancing dependency and emotional support of others.

Similarly, the keys to a father or father figure in the horoscope point to your INTERNAL father as well--the ability to be practical, responsible, realistic and face the limits. The potential harmony and/or conflict discussed refers primarily to your inner drive for achievement, control and authority (although it can play out through relationships with authority figures, including father).

There is the potential of harmony between your nurturing/ dependency experiences and your ability to be a partner. Your mother (or mother figure) could have encouraged your ability to share, to be an equal and to relate on the same level. Your early environment helped you to develop a sense of harmony, balance, aesthetic appreciation and/or competition.

There is potential harmony between your father (or authority figures) and your need to maintain lasting, one-to-one relationships. Your dad could have encouraged you to develop a firm sense of equality and the ability to meet others on their level. His support might have furthered your aesthetic talents, competitive spirit and/or sense of balance and harmony.

MIND & COMMUNICATION

This section is concerned with the way you relate to your thinking processes and how you communicate. Thoughts, speech and writing are some of the ways in which we share information. Reading, listening and teaching are other options. Here the focus is on the collection and exchange of ideas and the process through which we engage in this interchange.

The Diplomat

Words, for you, are a bridge to other people. They spark the relating instinct and get people involved with one another. Sometimes that involvement is cooperative and harmonious; other times it may be highly competitive. But the theme is a give and take between people, a back and forth, a sharing interaction. You prefer to have a peer, someone on your level with whom to bat the conversational ball back and forth. Innately sociable, you would rather discuss than monologue.

When you are in your appeasement mode, you can be too concerned with protecting the other person's feelings. This can lead to "little white lies" which lead to big bloopers as one lie begets another. Or, you may simply avoid arguments as unpleasant. Tact and diplomacy are probably skills for you; just use them at the appropriate time and place.

Any literature which appeals to your basic desire for balance is a possibility. This can range from pleasure in studying mathematics to enjoyment of manuals on fashion and design. The visual aspect is often important to you, and books on fine photography, architecture or other aesthetic forms may fill your needs. Beauty and appearance are often a concern and you could collect manuals on makeup, hair, exercise, clothes, personal appearance and creating an attractive "look." Love and affection are other possible topics of interest, so romances or books about relationships may occupy your shelves. If the competitive spirit predominates, law books may abound or books which teach expertise in whatever activity you currently want to win. You may hone your skills (through reading) in a variety of competitive events, from aikido to tennis; from backgammon to bridge; from poker to ping pong, etc.

Intuitive Understanding

Imaginative and sensitive, your thinking has a large share of intuition and feelings mixed in. Generally blessed with a creative imagination, you may be drawn to many artistic fields: films, poetry, painting, writing fiction, music, song writing, etc. Your fantasy skills are strong. Daydreaming is probably a hobby of yours, and some of your best ideas can come to you in that waking/dreaming twilight zone. Just be sure you can distinguish achievable fantasies from those that are pure wish fulfillment.

Able to blend the rational with the nonrational and the conscious with the unconscious, you can be a superb psychotherapist, an inspired artist, a persuasive advertiser or enter any other field which allows your imagination full rein and blends conscious reasoning with unconscious "knowing." Your perspective is toward the infinite. Sometimes this leads to dissatisfaction, when the human world does not match the ideal vision you have within. Rather than running away from an ugly reality (into fantasy or other escapes), the best path is to help bring that more ideal vision into existence on the physical plane. Helping, healing activities or artistic, aesthetic achievements can help achieve that goal.

The following are short summaries of the combinations of themes (mentioned above) involved in your mental explorations and communications:

With both fantasy and logic at your fingertips, you can create many beautiful images. Language can be flowing and a work of art with you. At times, the desire for ease and harmony could lead to being TOO diplomatic (e.g., evasive or untruthful). Your intuitive perceptions about others can be useful in psychotherapy or other healing work. Sometimes you may prefer the "head trip" to reality because it is smoother. Your talents can give much to others if you are willing to share.

This section addresses the issue of integration--blending your mental and communicative needs with other fundamental motivations.

There is potential conflict between your manner of thinking and communicating and your intuition and inner knowing. Your logic and intuition may be in conflict. You could feel scattered at times, wanting to know and absorb everything on all levels. Your conscious and unconscious understanding may be at odds with one another. Balance rationality and psychic understanding for best results.

CHILDREN AND CREATIVITY

This area of the horoscope applies to your capacity for doing more than has been done before. It points to creativity--or, more generally, zest--both on the physical level, through procreation and artistic pursuits, and on the emotional and mental levels through coming from your own unique center. During such an act, people tend to feel vital and alive--all the juices are flowing. There is a sense of excitement, of expansion, of pushing back the boundaries of life.

To create, to push boundaries, requires the ability to take risks. The gambler, the speculator, the investor, all need the courage to put their money on the line in hopes of a bigger return. The race car driver, hang glider, acrobat and similar people need courage and steady nerves to stretch their physical capacities to the limit. Some of the essence here is the thrill of an adrenaline rush. For many people a major outlet for the feelings of power, of aliveness, of excitement, comes through sexual acts. And for most of us, the tremendous buildup of falling in love, being in love and loving is a major component of stimulation in our lives. Love can be the ultimate risk.

This is the urge for ego-expansion, in whatever way we fulfill that need. It is connected to self-esteem; everyone needs a sense of pride in his/her actions and the ability to feel good about what we are doing in life. This section will discuss some of the themes around your self-esteem, pride in yourself and ability to create including potentials around children. Having children is one form of creativity, but remember that many other forms exist as well. For some people, pets or plants, rather than children, are recipients of nurturing energy.

When our needs for appreciation or esteem are not being met properly, we may project certain attributes onto lovers and/or children and meet these qualities through them. Thus, the following section will also include some options around love relationships. When reading about "children," think also in terms of your own, inner child--the playful, spontaneous, naturally creative, expressive and intuitive part which each of us has.

Up, Up and Away!

Fun and games time! Restless and ready to move, this is a combination eager to express. Pride and self-esteem are tied to the mental world, especially to the search for the truth. Optimism is often high and there tends to be a feeling of openness for something more. The sense is one of expansiveness. Grandiose ideas and projects may appeal as you want to do things in a BIG way! Each project may beget a new project, in an endless spiral of more and more activity. You could become carried away with your enthusiasms and get overextended.

Verbal skills are quite possible and this is a natural teacher/preacher combination with the desire to seek the limelight through conveying truth, ideals, inspiration, philosophy, religion, to other people. You might look to education (through degrees), travel, spiritual quests or religious principles for a sense of self-esteem and importance. This blend tends to go overboard on faith and may speculate too much too fast, trusting that all will work out in the end. The natural optimism and self-confidence in the area of risk-taking and self-expression could be overdone, even to the point of physical danger if excessive. Promotion comes naturally and humor could express in comedy acts or cartooning. Writing talent is likely and journalism may also appeal.

Where children are concerned, issues involve ideals, ideas and our quest for meaning in life. One variation is the individual who makes children into an ultimate value. In such a case, if one is good, more is better and the person may have lots of children. Another variation is the person who wants to be the perfect parent of perfect children in a perfect world and chooses NOT to have children if that ultimate vision is impossible. Parents may expect more than is humanly possible of children; children of parents; or parents of themselves. Mutual idealization can occur, with the parent feeling the children truly are perfect and the children returning the favor to the parent. Mutual disappointment can also happen when people discover the shortcomings of each other and their idol falls off his/her pedestal. Sharing the drive for something higher allows parents and children to pursue the truth together, whether in studies, travel, religious or spiritual pursuits, or simply having a lot of great parties. The focus is on a shared quest for whatever the people define as the ultimate, the most important, the most vital in their lives--that which provides meaning.

Success Equals Power

Self-esteem is measured through success and achievements in the outer world. Pride is based on accomplishments and handling responsibilities. Approval and admiration is often sought through a career and ambitions may be high. Since self-worth is being based on performance, there is the danger that you may become self-critical and feel inadequate when you judge your performance as below standard. Conversely, when you achieve successes, you are likely to feel great joy. Success breeds more success and you could end up glorying in power and reaching for the heights. Avoid both extremes: self-critical denials and put-downs as well as overreach and excessive ambition. You usually feel a strong accountability for your actions. You are quite prepared to accept the credit and the blame.

As well as natural talent for business, you can be creative in areas requiring careful attention to structure: sculpting, woodworking, glassblowing, working with crystals or building doll houses (and construction in general). You enjoy having tangible output from your creativity.

Issues with children revolve around duty, responsibility, hard work and realism. Your attitude toward parenting tends to be serious, dedicated, concerned about doing it right. This can be channeled into a critical, judgmental attitude--toward yourself as a parent or toward the children. A performance orientation can be helpful in terms of a responsible attitude, but don't overdo it. One extreme is the parent who is overly responsible, tending to carry the world on his/her back. Such a parent may even have children with special problems, which further encourage the taking up of their burdens.

A challenge with this combination is to be CLEAR about who ought to do what in the relationship. A parent who does TOO MUCH for the children ends up with spoiled children who do not know their own strength since Mommy or Daddy did everything for them. A parent who demands heavy responsibilities from children before they are capable of handling them ends up with scared, inadequate children who feel no matter what they've done, it is not enough--children who expect to fail.

This blend is also common in family businesses or where the work involves the children. Channeling the work (critical) attitude into shared tasks is usually more comfortable than having it affect the emotional side of relationships.

Issues with father (revolving around the handling of power, responsibility, control and authority) are likely to be faced again through children. If you have lots of unresolved feelings about your father, you may meet him again--in a sense--through one of your children. The challenge is to be able to set realistic limits for your children, providing them with a firm foundation of rules without being restrictive, and encouraging them to develop their own capacities to be strong, powerful, and effective in the outer world.

Parents

Your attitudes about being significant, important, loved and appreciated are significantly affected by your experience of your parent(s). At least one parent was, positively or negatively, a role model for being a star. This could have been a dramatic, magnetic, exciting, fun-loving parent with whom you had a strong, loving bond. It could also have been a childish, self-centered, egoistic parent who constantly demanded attention, control and dominance over everything. Another alternative is a parent who becomes like a child to you, in that you end up caring for the parent, looking after him/her as if that person were your child. Whether the model of your parent(s) was comfortable or not, the parent(s) taught you about being in the limelight and gaining recognition and approval.

The pattern continues with your own children, if you choose to have them. That is, you could easily have a child who reminds you of one or both parents. In a sense, it would be like meeting your mother or father again through your children. If you felt a lack of nurturant caring (the traditional mothering quality) or responsible looking after (the traditional fathering quality) with either parent, you could face similar feelings with your own children. The danger is relating to a child as if that child were your parent, rather than seeing him/her as an individual. Finishing old business with parents, releasing any leftover feelings, forgiving them and yourself for any unpleasant interactions, can help insure a positive relationship with your own children.

Of course, if you had the warm and loving experience with your own parents, it is easier to create the same context with your kids. There is a strong potential for being a very responsible parent, caring deeply about what happens to your children. Just don't get TOO serious about it. Remember to relax also.

Moon's Nodes across 5th - 11th or Leo - Aquarius

You are facing a polarity in your love relationships of heart versus head. You may be torn between thinking and feeling. You can be very rational, objective and detached at times, but you also get caught up in intense, emotional reactions. Somehow, the two must be balanced in your relationships with lovers and/or children.

Part of the conflict can also express as a pull between being a unique, independent individualist versus loving and being loved. You need attention, applause and approval from those you care about, yet you also enjoy a sense of aloofness, going your own way, relating to humanity more than close, intimate associations. The passionate lover must be blended with the detached humanitarian.

It is not uncommon with this combination for people to delay long-term love relationships and having children. Often they are ambivalent about giving up their freedom, so put off final commitments.

If you project any end of these conflicts, you will probably attract lovers/children to overdo them. They could be so cool and detached you get turned off--or able to rationalize and intellectualize anything. They could be so emotional, dramatic and inclined to exaggerate situations, that you are wary of listening to their version. With them, you are learning to balance detachment and drama, excitement and intellect, passion and rationality, objective and subjective, head and heart.

This section addresses the issue of integration--blending your needs for creativity with other fundamental motivations.

Your creativity is potentially in harmony with your desire for pleasures and material security in life. You may have to compromise between your desire to take chances, breaking new ground and your need for life's basic comforts, but the ability to blend the two is there. Artistic talent is possible; so is skill in investments. Whether through children, finances or other areas, you can bring together risk-taking and common sense for optimum results.

Your creative spirit is in potential harmony with your need to do something well in life. Your risk-taking abilities enhance your practical accomplishments; your pragmatism complements your zest and spontaneity. You can harmonize working and having children; you are capable of blending the two easily. Your sensible side and your enthusiastic side work well together.

Your creative urges are in potential harmony with your desire for partnership, equality and harmony. One option is a natural reinforcement between the roles of partner and parent--each supporting the other. Artistic talent is also likely and persuasive abilities are possible. Your zest and enthusiasm help maintain excitement in your relationships, while your need for balance makes sure no one gets too self-centered.

RELATIONSHIPS

The next section applies to your close, personal relationships with other people. This includes marriage and living together, but also close friendships, business partnerships, therapeutic relationships. Any systematic, ongoing, regular interaction with other people is a part of this arena. The issues revolve around not just a verbal and emotional sharing of yourself with others and relating to others, but also the capacity to share the physical world (money, possessions, sexuality, pleasures) with intimates in a mutually satisfying manner.

A basic issue in relationships is: what are we expressing, allowing and manifesting of our various potentials and what are we denying, holding back of who we could be. Whatever potentials we restrict within ourselves, we tend to unconsciously attract those qualities from other people. The problem is, the more we look for something "outside," in that other person, the more we tend to get an extreme--an exaggerated version of that potential.

Everyone in our lives is teaching us something about ourselves. If I am out of touch with my need for independence, I attract excessively independent people. They are providing the examples, the role models, for me to learn how to be independent. The goal is not for me to be like those other people. Those individuals are probably TOO independent. Whatever quality we deny, other people tend to manifest it in excess, in extremes. So, the challenge is not to become LIKE that other person, but rather look at the quality the person is exhibiting (in extreme form) and figure out positive, fulfilling ways to manifest it in our lives.

Because we are all complicated people, we often have contradictory needs and desires. Our motivations may be mixed. In such cases, it is very easy to identify with one part of who we are, and repress (push into the unconscious), project (meet through others people in exaggerated fashion), displace (express a natural drive in an uncomfortable area of life) or otherwise disown another side of our being. Notice which of the following themes in your chart might conflict with one another.

Consider what qualities you may be repressing, projecting, displacing or denying and look for positive ways to manifest those attributes in your life and relationships.

There are people who have been able to integrate these inner ambivalences (and you may be one of them). Such people have arranged their lives to have times and places for both independence and emotional attachments. Of course, no relationship is optimally balanced. There will inevitably be times when one party wants more freedom or more closeness than the other. The question is one of degree. Are both people reasonably happy with the balance MOST of the time? Such individuals avoid extremes on either end, instead seeking a middle ground most of the time. They communicate clearly with loved ones to resolve issues as early (and easily) as possible. They acknowledge their inner conflicts, which is the first step to finding solutions. They realize that life is a process, where new answers are found as old issues reform in new disguises. They know that each variation of integration will become outmoded as they change and grow and are open to discovering new ways of relating and balancing with one another. May your relationships be full of the best and the most enhancing experiences!

Assertion Versus Accommodation--Owning Your Own Power

The issues revolve around identity and self-expression within the context of a relationship. Freedom of action is often an issue. Space, independence and a sense of separateness may be important. One question is how much you feel confident, in touch with, aware of and able to express your own, personal power and ability to be who you are, act as you choose. There are six major variations of actions among people who share this theme. The first three most people find somewhat uncomfortable; the last three are usually more fulfilling.

The first three variations involve a sense of vulnerability, people who are out of touch with their own power, feeling at the mercy of what others could or would do to them. They experience other people as having the power to use or abuse them, accept them or reject them, allow them to act or prevent them. Coming from such a position of powerlessness, one variation is the doormat. Such people try to please and appease others. "Tell me what to do; tell me how to be so that you will like me." They try to "psyche" other people out; figure out what is desired and provide it. The unconscious (or partially conscious) hope is: "If I do what they want, I won't get hurt." Yet, as long as people experience the power as EXTERNAL rather than INTERNAL, they will fear what others MIGHT do. The extreme form of the "doormat" is found in people SO out of touch with their own power, that they stay in abusive relationships, afraid or feeling unable, unwilling, or undeserving of seeking something better.

A second variation could be summarized as, "I'll get you first." The feeling is still one of vulnerability. The assumption is that other people are threats, so the individual acts to "wipe out" the other people for fear they might hurt him/her. The motto is: "The best defense is a good offense." Actions against others can range from mental denigrations to verbal attacks to actual physical violence in extreme forms. (Hitler and Jim Jones were extreme examples of this theme.)

A third variation is to seek safety through withdrawal. These people feel fearful of what others might do to them, so they avoid others. They withdraw from personal relationships, shut themselves away in a shell. Like the old Simon and Garfunkel song, they pretend: "I am a rock; I am an island." They try to convince themselves they do not need anyone, but strive to keep the world at arm's length, lest they be hurt.

The fourth variation involves simple compromise. The individual gives up some of the power. The other party in the relationship gives up some of the power and they meet in the middle. They compromise and cooperate. They negotiate to reach a mutually satisfying plan of action. Neither gets EXACTLY and TOTALLY what they want, but both get a reasonable solution.

A fifth variation is healthy competition. Such people find and develop their power to act in the world and assert themselves through competitive activities. When structured, with rules and regulations so no one gets hurt, such an outlet can be very positive. Competitive sports, games and business allow an individual to test strength and power against the abilities of someone else. Note that a contest has to be between equals or near equals in order to be a true contest. If the people involved are of extremely disparate abilities, everyone knows beforehand who will win and who will lose; there is no contest. Competition involves the experience of both winning (and the other person is still okay) and losing (and discovering we are still okay). We build our strength through the challenging of another individual.

A sixth variation is to establish relationships of a helping/healing nature. Working with people we perceive as "weaker" or "needy" in some way allows us a position of strength. We are less likely to feel vulnerable or threatened when dealing with people who come to us for help. This enables the person to deal with issues of power, assertion and self-expression in the context of relating, without feeling overwhelmed by others.

The key issue within all these variations is the question of discovering ways in which EACH PERSON in the relationship can be free to express who and what s/he is, naturally, spontaneously, without fear. If one person has all the power in the relationship, there is no balance. The person projecting (unconsciously giving away) that power needs to reclaim it. The person trying to run the whole show needs to get in touch with his/her ability to be vulnerable, receptive, sharing rather than unilaterally demanding "my way."

Other overlapping issues include freedom, courage, the ability to take risks, self-assertion and independence of action. Unless we are confident of our own strength and power, we may fear to act, to assert ourselves, to take chances, to be who we are. However, if we have an overdeveloped sense of independence, freedom and self-expression, we may have difficulties making commitments, sharing and compromising. If we identify with one extreme, we are likely to attract the opposite extreme in our relationships.

Staying in the middle, with a relationship which allows some space, independence, separateness between the parties can help to integrate the freedom and closeness needs. Sharing the power is a goal. If each person appreciates his/her own being and feels comfortable with manifesting that, the relationship is more likely to be balanced, with each able to be themselves and allow the other to also be who s/he is.

Fantasy?

The search is for that "made in heaven" relationship--a seeking of infinite Love and Beauty through human interactions. So often, the dream is not redeemable in the real world. More positive options include seeking that wonderful experience WITH someone else (not expecting them to provide it). People can merge with the Infinite through art, beauty, nature and religious or spiritual experiences. Shared ecstasy can be achieved.

Less fulfilling routes include spending one's life on a quest for Prince or Princess Charming--who either does not exist or seems to be found repeatedly, only to turn out flawed later on. Repeated involvements with the "ideal mate" do not always teach the lesson; sometimes people continue to believe that "THIS one is the magic one!" Or, we can attract victims--whether drug addicts, alcoholics, down and out sufferers who look to us to save them, succor them, rescue them, and turn their world into a lovely, rosy glow. The task, of course, is not possible, but if we need to be needed, we may try--for a time. (Then, of course, we end up feeling victimized by the victim!)

Some people "marry God" because no one else is good enough. We all need relationships; we all need that yearning for something higher, a sense of emotional connection to the Infinite. Seeking the infinite WITH other human beings is much easier to manage than expecting another human being to BE infinite and perfect.

Other forms of projection include attracting artists or people involved in helping and healing others. As long as both parties can manifest some of their idealism in healthy ways in the relationship, it can be a most beautiful, loving and inspiring association.

The following are summaries of mixtures of the issues (delineated above) being faced in your relationships:

Emotionality is a keynote in your relationships. The potential is there for tremendous warmth and caring. An intensity of feelings is likely. You tend to attract relationships which will arouse the depths within you and the other party. There may be an internal struggle between expressing feelings and holding back for security reasons. Try to keep room for both your spontaneous forms of expression as well as your more cautious mode.

If you are out of touch with this volatile side within your own nature, you may attract partners subject to extreme mood swings. Or, you may simply get involved with incredibly intense, deeply emotional individuals who take everything to heart. Your relationships may not always be easy, but they are not likely to be casual.

Moon's Nodes across 5th - 11th or Leo - Aquarius

The likely issues here are the balance between the head and the heart or intellect and emotions. A related issue is the tension between freedom needs and desires to love and be loved. Within your close relationships, you are seeking to integrate the desire to be unique, bright, intellectual and independent with the need to be appreciated, admired, passionate and committed to a close association. You could bounce from one extreme to the other--cool, aloof and detached one moment, passionately exciting and excited the next; calm and rational one moment, intensely emotionally involved the next. You might decide retaining your personal liberty and not being like anyone else are the most important things in life, only to change your mind and feel that having someone to love, look up to and applaud you is an essential ingredient.

You could also attract partners who play out either side of this polarity for you. If you identify with one side, they will typically express the opposite extreme. You play hot; they play cold (or vice versa). You play emotional; they play intellectual. You play equalitarian and we are all equal; they play King (Queen) of the Mountain and "I'm better than anyone else." And so on, until both of you learn to reach a balance and to share both kinds of expression in a happy medium.

This section addresses the issue of integration--blending your relationship needs with other fundamental motivations.

There is potential harmony between your desire for equality, for sharing your life and your need to search for something Higher in life. Faith supports your partnerships and your relationships affirm your quest for something Higher.

There is potential conflict between your desire for equality, for sharing your life and your yearning to experience infinite love and beauty. Your urge to merge with something Higher could pull you away from relationships (or vice versa). Your seeking of an ultimate might make associating with mere human beings a challenge. Avoid the extremes of savior/victims involvements while channeling your idealism into a constructive role in your relationships.

BELIEFS

This section addresses your underlying assumptions about life, truth, reality, morality, ethics and beliefs. One's world view is reflected in religion, philosophy, science, education, spiritual precepts or other systems which offer a sense of meaning, an explanation of why we are here and where we are going.

This area of the chart mirrors the issues you are dealing with in terms of your belief systems and values. They could be firmly and solidly based, or you could have a situation of too much faith, too little faith or faith in inappropriate areas. By your awareness of the basic issues and drives, you can choose to express those motivations in a manner most satisfying and fulfilling for you.

A Zest for Life

Doing more than you have done before is a primary motivation. Life is often viewed as full of exciting opportunities. Love is usually central in your values and you can be quite a romantic. Your urge is for expansion into the world, pouring out from your own center to receive a response from others. This feedback could be in the form of love, admiration, money or applause. You may also place a high value on power--having an impact on people.

A key ingredient in your expectations is the enhancement of self-esteem. You need to be center stage in some way, in the limelight, receiving support, attention, appreciation. You are probably drawn to belief systems which allow you room to shine, which are magnetic, dynamic and exciting. You enjoy a show and even a spectacle!

If you are still uncomfortable with your natural charisma, you may choose to be inspired and swept away by others. You may attract dynamic, "live wire" religious leaders who easily sway the emotions of their followers. That "starring" quality needs an outlet in your faith and beliefs.

You may place a premium on taking risks. Since you value life on a grand scale, you are willing to gamble, to take chances, hoping for a rewarding response! You tend to have an underlying optimism, a sense that things will be even better tomorrow.

The Pragmatist

You are most likely to trust and believe in hard work and anything you can see, hear, touch and measure. Dealing with the "real" (i.e., physical) world is generally a priority. You tend to put your faith in doing a good job and taking care of business. This sometimes means you do most of the work, because you are more satisfied with your manner of accomplishments than anyone else's.

You are not inclined to value the purely mystical; you seek illuminations that are functional--that can be put to use in the world. A motto for you might be: "But what can you DO with it?" Efficiency is very important to you and you value whatever will get the job done the most competently.

Your expectations of efficiency carry over into health as well and you generally keep good health as a major goal. You tend to appreciate all the puritan virtues--thrift, responsibility, practicality, productivity, caution, etc. The usual result is a pragmatic faith--based on what "works" for you.

Your concentration and focus on doing things well can sometimes lead to excessive flaw-finding and nit-picking. It may be a challenge for you to be able to "Let go and let God" as you tend to want to fix any little thing that goes wrong and you can almost always find another fault to be improved! But your general focus on practical accomplishments usually serves you well as you can handle almost anything which comes up.

The following are discussions of combinations of the themes (discussed above) significant in your beliefs and values:

You probably value energetic accomplishments. Your priorities are a blend of self-expression and productivity. The combination can be highly effective. If the fire side wins out, you may simply care most about doing exactly as you please in life. If the earth side wins out, you may put your faith in concrete achievements and responsibility. Together, drive and perseverance can move mountains if you choose.

Moon's Nodes across 6th - 12th or Virgo - Pisces

The polarity here is between spiritual aspirations and inspirations versus a focus on the physical details of life. You may feel torn between an instinctive attraction toward a sense of faith and a deep need to be practical and grounded in the material world. You could swing to either extreme: getting lost in fantasies, dreams, visions, the immensity of the universe or concentrating totally on putting all the pieces together and a disciplined, practical approach to life.

The challenge is to integrate your competent, capable, physical bent with your imaginative, visionary capabilities. You need a sense of faith to give meaning and purpose to your everyday activities but enough pragmatism to get things done in the real world. If you have balanced this polarity, you are likely to express both sides through such fields as the talented artist or craftsperson, the healer, a helper, the practical idealist and the realistic mystic.

Feelings of inadequacy could create problems at either end. If you lack trust in your own abilities, you may be afraid to try; you could give up sooner than is necessary in attempting projects. If you lack trust in the Universe, you will feel overly responsible and try to do everything yourself (not trusting others to do as well).

Then you end up feeling burdened and pressured. If you feel overwhelmed by the infinite cosmos, you may retreat into concentrating solely on the material world as a solution for your anxiety. If you are too concerned with getting things done JUST SO, you may have difficulty relaxing and allowing life to flow at times.

Faith in yourself and also in a Higher Power allows you to do all that you can do in a reasonable, competent fashion to get the job done and then trust that the Universe will take care of the rest.

This section addresses the issue of integration--blending your beliefs and values with other fundamental motivations.

There is potential conflict between your highest values and your desire for one-to-one relationships with others. A strong sense of justice and fair play is likely, but you may feel expectations are an issue in your partnerships. Beware of demanding too much of others or attracting others who demand too much of you. Channel the reach for the Infinite into spiritual, religious, artistic or helping activities; practice acceptance and tolerance for human relationships.

There is potential conflict in the area of your beliefs, values and moral/religious/spiritual systems. Your conscious and unconscious faith may be at odds. You may accept certain principles on one level, but attract opposite experience due to unconscious ambivalences. Excessive idealism could be an issue, or simply lack of clarity among your many beliefs and goals. Systematizing and organizing your thinking about what is ultimately most important and meaningful in life is likely to bring the best results.

SEXUALITY

Sexuality and sensuality are life areas involving such intimate and highly charged contact with others that it is often particularly difficult to see them clearly and objectively. The horoscope helps understanding by providing valuable insight into patterns of behavior which are often entirely or primarily subconscious. Once we become conscious of a behavior pattern, we can observe it clearly and initiate changes whereby we can express our needs lucidly and directly, rather than via projection or via subtle and not so subtle game playing. Recognizing and successfully communicating our own needs has the wonderful side effect of enabling us to open and respond to the needs of others at a very deep level.

With conflicting desires and messages from society about appropriate sexual behavior, it is no surprise that problems often emerge. We repress and have sexually related physical ailments. We project and invite power struggles. We become so confused and hurt that we give up on the whole idea altogether--at least temporarily.

The Active Lover

You are like a firecracker shooting into the sky. Excitement drives you, and sex can be a prime motivator. Easily aroused, but also quickly turned off, you want action or you'll move on. Passionate, but often impatient, you may fall in and out of love in the time it takes most people to introduce themselves.

The thrill of pursuit is part of your pleasure and you may not fully appreciate a relationship too easily attained. However, much as you enjoy a conquest, you will not pursue forever. If your partner plays coy too long, you may seek someone more immediately responsive. Like a fire, you burn fiercely but can die rapidly if the flames are not fed.

Your sexual style is active and exciting. The benchmark is to do anything ONCE. You abhor repetition. You will try each position, one time, and then look for a new approach. You can be quite athletic in lovemaking, as you enjoy motion, action, and physical exertion. Your energy level is very high. Your patience, however, is often low, and partners may have trouble keeping up with you when you go into your perpetual motion mode. You can be highly sensual but also enjoy occasional "quickies" due to your fast reaction time. Sports are often a turn-on. Pumping iron may pump up your libido. Physical fitness and firmly muscled bodies often appeal. Risk-taking activities may excite you. When your adrenaline rises, so does your sex drive!

As a lover, you need a leash so long you don't even know it's there. You demand personal independence. Possessiveness is a no-no! You are inclined to take off, doing your own thing, periodically. Other people have to learn to put up with periodic absences. There is a loner streak in you. Sometimes you just do NOT want to relate.

Sexuality may be mixed with anger, aggression and power for you. Sex can be a way of asserting yourself, declaring your existence. If you are out of touch with your own power and needs for assertion, you could attract self-centered, aggressive, even violent people. Either of you might be selfish, rash, careless or even physically violent. Fights and arguments are negative ways to get the exciting "highs" that people want. Learn to utilize your strength in a positive fashion. You need a lover who values independence and freedom as do you, someone as strong as you are, someone to share your seeking of excitement!

If these qualities are projected, lovers can be too impetuous and totally lacking in responsibility, i.e., the ability to respond. They may seek self-gratification to the extreme so that you feel used and abused in sexual acts but definitely not satisfied and well-loved. A traveling or truant partner may be your lot--someone who checks in occasionally, perhaps primarily for some action but is generally noted for his/her absence.

A harmonious connection promotes giving and receiving, space for individual projects and a willingness to play together. You can share the fun, love life and one another together!

The Dream Lover

Sex, for you, can be a cosmic experience. You seek a merging of souls as much as bodies and a sense of union with the entire Universe on one level of your being. One potential is an incredibly joyous experience, with each wave of ecstasy lifting you higher and higher. Because you are capable of making an intuitive connection with a lover, you may participate in a mental/emotional blending as well as a physical sharing. Your sensitivity allows you to tune in and join with the other person.

If your need for submergence is carried too far, you may become lost in illusions and delusions. Because you WANT an ecstatic, incredible connection, you may fantasize that it is happening before enough discipline has been put out to create it. You could talk yourself into a fairy tale image which does not exist, only to be disillusioned later. You CAN make beautiful music together, but keep your eyes open along the way!

Another potential is falling into the roles of savior/victim with lovers. You may attract people who expect you to play God for them--make their world perfect, make everything loving and lovely. Or, you may be looking for inhuman perfection and idealism in your lovers, expecting them to supply the ecstasy on demand rather than learning to co-create it. The reach for something higher through your lovemaking is a very valid expression for you. Just be sure both parties are contributing to the emergence of an ideal vision.

Other possibilities include the seeking of a love so holy and inspired that no one measures up. You may declare sexuality as sacrosanct and refuse to share with anyone less than ideal (godlike). Or, you can look for an infinitely beautiful experience through artistic expression. Sharing aesthetic feelings with a lover then becomes very important.

The potential for pleasure is immense! Your rich imagination, sensitive perception, intuitive understanding, idealistic seeking and need for communion can blend together to create with another visionary person the most intense, ecstatic and uplifting of lovemaking sessions. Truly can you be swept away by the utter perfection of life and love!

The following are summaries of the mixtures of issues (delineated above) applicable to your handling of sexuality.

Making love for you is to experience incredible ups and downs in your emotions. Rarely in that safe, neutral zone, you tend to be euphoric and ecstatic or down and depressed. Sometimes your lovers may feel like you are two people: a confident, outgoing, eager lover and a shy, withdrawing, timid soul who needs to be coaxed and talked into making love. You can be incredibly spontaneous and impulsive in bed and then turn around, absolutely clamming up and shutting down.

If you are projecting some of these qualities, your lovers are likely to present you with the same kind of contradictory images. They could range from incredible "bon vivance" to rock bottom hopelessness. Either of you might bottle up emotions only to explode in a tirade or rage and frustration against others--or implode, becoming ill or involved in a series of accidents or surgeries. The challenge is to moderate your energy so that it is neither too self-contained nor too outwardly directed.

Once you recognize and make a place for both your sensitive, inward side and your risk-taking, outward side, lovemaking is likely to be more universally satisfying. You are amazingly intense; that is not likely to change. The issue is feeling a balance in your emotional life between outward expression and inward processing. Sexual interactions can assist developing that balance as you move between an inner experience of your pleasure and the other person's reactions to an outer involvement in the process of mutual gratification and back.

You need to give to and receive encouragement and reassurance from a lover, who can be an invaluable anchor if s/he is sensitive and level. Finding partners can be a frightening undertaking, because you tend to swing between great self-assurance and tremendous self-doubt. Seeking people who are willing to cooperate in a mutual support system can be beneficial and successful.

NODES OF THE MOON

There is a natural polarity present in your attitudes towards lovemaking. Able to see two sides, you can be balanced and flexible in your approach. If you get carried away, however, sexual relations could seem like a seesaw--flipping from one extreme to the other without finding that middle ground. Another potential is attracting partners who express one end of the polarity (usually to excess) while you express the other end (usually to excess). The key is integration--both of you able to share the qualities depicted in a moderate and mutually satisfying manner.

Moon's Nodes across 5th - 11th or Leo - Aquarius

You may feel torn between letting it all hang out with an intense, driving passion and a spontaneous joie de vivre versus an intellectual approach which analyzes everything objectively to figure out the stimulation that will be most rewarding. You may swing from a powerful, loving commitment to the urge to run away because things are getting "too heavy." Your needs for freedom could seem at odds with your desire for sexual excitement, until you make room in your life for both.

This section addresses the issue of integration--blending your sexual desires with other fundamental motivations.

There is potential harmony in your handling of sensual and sexual needs. You can balance passion and comfort. You have the capacity for pleasure from all kinds of tactile involvements and physical indulgences as well as from sexual interactions. Your capacity for enjoyment is marked.

There is potential harmony between your search for ecstasy through a cosmic connection and your search for ecstasy within a human, sexual sharing. Your ability to tune into the Infinite (through art, beauty, nature, spiritual paths, etc.) feeds your passion on the physical level. Your lovemaking can reach levels of such deep connection and communion, that you experience a blending with the other person and the Universe.

There is potential conflict sexually around issues of yearning for cosmic beauty, grace and harmony. This can lead to you or a lover donning rose-colored glasses with subsequent disillusionment and disappointment. Either of you could talk yourselves (or the other person) into walking down the garden path, to eventual regret. Romance is wonderful and a marvelous component for satisfying sexual exchanges; just do not depend on romance alone!

MONEY

Please accept our commiseration: this printout will not tell you when you are likely to win the lottery or come into an inheritance. It might, however, help you to come to terms with some of your ideas and anxieties about money, and perhaps even clear away some blocks that have been preventing you from making more of the treasured stuff, or enjoying what you do have.

The Free Spender

Money, sensuality and beauty are all potential forums for self-expression. The active pursuit of beauty (e.g., skating, dancing, diving, swimming, Tai Chi) is one potential. This combination usually indicates the ability to be comfortable with one's self--to like who you are. If overdone, self-indulgence (in food, alcohol, spending money, collecting possessions, smoking, drugs) is possible. Pleasure is sought through direct, spontaneous action--doing your own thing.

Spending habits are usually open. Impulsiveness can be a problem. Usually, if you like it, you buy it. You can be very active in pursuit of material gain, as long as it is what you want. You follow your own rules in making and spending money--and break those "rules" if you feel like it.

Financial Faith

Sometimes you seem to operate under the assumption that "God will balance the checkbook." Your faith in life can lead to extremes. Though this combination can indicate someone who is truly protected and taken care of financially (by money from others), it can also symbolize a lack of clarity about resources and money. There is a tendency toward wish fulfillment: "If I think it, it must be so." Preferring to focus on what is beautiful and appealing, you can succumb to the idea that "If I ignore it, it will go away." Only it doesn't!

You can also put your imagination and dreams to work for you--earning money through beauty and artistic creations, films, advertising, sales--anything which involves a little illusion. Often, this combination shows tremendous aesthetic talents and an instinctive sense of beauty.

Personal

Making and spending money are forms of self-expression for you. Part of your identity is found through the handling of resources. Thus, a threat to them can seem like a personal threat to you. Your expenditures are usually purchases that satisfy some basic drives within your life. You are most concerned with here-and-now needs--what you can directly put to use. You make money and spend it primarily to please yourself. Less interested in other people's ideas, you tend to make your own financial decisions.

The following are depictions of the combinations of themes (pictured above) being faced in the area of money.

You feel very strongly about money and can have intense emotional reactions to the state of your finances. However, you are dealing with an inner ambivalence where finances are concerned. On the one hand, you have strong desires to "blow" money periodically on some kind of a spending spree. On the other hand, you have strong security needs and feel the urge to keep a little savings around all the time--just in case.

You could confuse friends by alternating between these two approaches or by appearing a total spendthrift in one area only to pinch pennies unbearably in another area. Alternating styles does not have to be a problem. If you can enjoy your free-spending habits when you feel the urge and appreciate your caution and foresightedness when you are into being thrifty, you are simply versatile. But if you are bemoaning your lack of foresight when you make an impulsive purchase or if you feel confined and frustrated when you are into a saving mode, the integration is lacking. Enjoy your current handling of finances, knowing that the other side is likely to emerge before too long.

This section addresses the issue of integration--blending your financial attitudes and needs with other fundamental motivations.

There is relative harmony in the area of money, pleasures, possessions and beauty. This suggests a good potential for being comfortable. You can enjoy what you have materially and sensually. Some indulgence is possible, but generally this is an easygoing approach to finances, appreciating security but not inclined to push too hard. You enjoy the good things in life, but are less likely to break your back trying to get them. Being laid-back in your attitude about finances is most helpful.

Your handling of money is potentially in harmony with your visionary, idealistic side. You could gain resources through artistic healing (or victim) routes. Your inner wisdom, used with discretion, can aid you in financial decisions; your intuition can be a real asset in some circumstances. Your unconscious faith is a likely source of support and can operate as an invisible "guardian angel," making sure that your interests are protected.

Your handling of money is potentially in conflict with your desire for balance, harmony and one-to-one relationships. This could indicate ambivalence over spending resources on personal or joint pleasures. Your relationship could be a source of outgo or there might be conflicts with a partner over finances. Differing ideas about what is fair, just and equitable in the area of resources are possible. Compromise.

Your handling of money is potentially in conflict with your seeking of infinite love and beauty. Your idealism, if excessive, could lead you astray. Wearing rose-colored glasses could result in financial disillusionment, disappointment and even victimization if carried too far. The opposite extreme is a total lack of trust (in others, in the universe) around money which could lead to difficulties as very little is guaranteed in this world. Find a middle ground between believing too much and believing too little around money.

GROWTH AREAS

Growth areas refer to issues which we find difficult to ignore this lifetime. The themes involved are important for us to face, but often point to areas where we experience personal discomfort. The tendency is, where our growth areas are involved, to overdo or underdo. We may exaggerate the energy involved and carry it to an extreme. We also may sit on our potential, repressing our abilities and perhaps attracting other people who will do to excess what we do not allow within ourselves. Sometimes we are dealing inappropriately with a potential learning experience by overdoing the energy in one part of our life and underdoing it in another.

While reading this section, keep in mind a few questions: Am I expressing this potential in a balanced way? Am I carrying this theme too far in any area of my life? Am I refusing to acknowledge this potential within myself? How can I express the possibilities indicated here most positively?

Faith, Trust and Beliefs

Goals, ideals, visions, philosophies and belief systems are the focus or concentration. The lesson often revolves around faith--too much, too little, or in the wrong area (worshipping another human being instead of God). The search for life's meaning is central here. Meeting the challenge includes achieving a reachable sense of faith and purpose in life without demanding more than is possible from ourselves, the world or other people. It includes having something to strive for, but being able to enjoy the journey TOWARD our goals.

The element of Fire is emphasized.

The theme revolves around confidence, spontaneity, courage, risk-taking and action. If underdone, you may feel insecure, afraid to try, inhibited, unwilling to act naturally, threatened and fearful of doing your own thing. Exercises to encourage self-esteem, faith, zest, enthusiasm and assertiveness can all be helpful. Pay attention to the times in your life when you get positive feedback for being strong, quick, vibrant and active. Reward yourself for those behaviors.

If overdone, you may be prone to hasty, rash, impulsive and foolish behaviors. Your courage may outweigh your caution and common sense. Your determination to live life on your own terms, doing things YOUR way may hurt other people. Your faith may be excessive. Practicing patience, follow-through and empathy can help to balance your rapid-fire approach to life.

The quality of Mutability is emphasized.

The themes revolve around thinking, communicating, consensual reality and ideals. Flexibility, adaptability and versatility are highlighted. If these qualities are carried to an extreme, you may be learning to be more focused, to establish priorities, to choose among your many interests and talents which one(s) to pursue at a given moment. Expectations can be an issue. Excessive idealism may be a challenge, the tendency to want more than is possible--from life in general, relationships, work, yourself or other areas. Realism must balance your visions. Another potential focus is to make peace between your inner dreams and consensual reality--not to value one over the other, but being able to blend and combine.

If this is a theme you are learning to express, the emphasis is on developing the ability to bend, to adapt, to learn vicariously. Thinking and planning ahead, theorizing can be more helpful than charging into life.

Information gleaned from observing others, reading and studying may enable you to sidestep the traumas direct experience can bring. Openness is being called for, an awareness of the multiplicity of options that lie before you at any given moment.

Fire/Earth

The key here is confidence with capability.

If overdone, you are likely to overwhelm other people, as you determinedly pursue whatever your goals are with ambition and endurance. You may sometimes regret the end results of your actions, because you were too focused on getting something done to question whether you really WANTED what the likely outcome would be.

If underdone, you may tend to drift through life, to react rather than act, to allow others to do the initiating. You may prefer a rich inner life to an active outer one. Learning to master the outside world and accomplish some dreams is an important part of your work this lifetime.

Emotions/Intellect Polarity

A blend is sought between the passions and the intellect. The calls of the heart must be mixed with the inclinations of the head. Intensity and detachment can both contribute to a useful end result if they do not fight one another. The need to feel special and "better than" in some fashion must confront the sense of everyone being equal and deserving of equal opportunity. Equality and special privileges vie for recognition as we make choices. Love relationships and friendships are arenas to face these issues as we learn to make peace between freedom and closeness; fiery emotions and intellectual objectivity; specialness and equality.

Mental

The theme revolves around the mind and communication. It could be a case of excessive emphasis, such as an overly intellectual approach, rationalizing everything. Or, the tendency to believe that thinking can solve any problem or see communication as the answer to any ills. Objectivity may be overrated and the mind put on a pedestal.

Another possibility is a denial of your mental focus, a tendency to experience it through other people, a discomfort with your verbal, communicative and logical skills. Your inner standards could inhibit you in this area, or you could be comparing yourself to other people's accomplishments in an exaggerated fashion.

FUTURE

People come into life with certain tendencies and habit patterns already developed. This includes issues likely to emerge in the future. Human development does follow logical sequences, and some themes can be predicted. What this section discusses is some of the issues, feelings and concerns which are likely to emerge with age and maturity.

We cannot detail everything. A more complete look would require current patterns (not just your natal or birth chart), but a few themes do emerge.

Go For It!

A movement in your life is toward increasing focus on creativity, expansion and doing more than you have done before. Pouring out from your own center--whether through children, speculation, investments or other risks--becomes more of a priority as you seek to gain rewards from the world. Positive feedback, whether financial pay-offs or love and admiration from others, is of greater value to you now.

Truth Seeking

A movement in your life is toward increasing focus on the search for the truth. Whether channeled into travel, philosophy, religion, metaphysics, meditation, spiritual quests or other paths, your urge to know and understand the meaning of life is likely to grow with time. Faith and optimism tend to expand as you have an evolving, positive spirit.

Facing the "Real World"

A movement in your life is toward increasing focus on duty, responsibility and realism. Your career and achievements in the world are likely to be even more important to you. Your focus on the "rules of the game" (of life) tends to increase with age. You are likely to equate age with wisdom, maturity and caution, weighing your actions carefully. You seek predictable, stable successes.

The following are descriptions of combinations of themes (mentioned earlier) which are likely keys to future trends:

A movement in your life is toward increased extraversion, confidence, zest, enthusiasm and spontaneity. You may experience a sense of greater vitality and energy in your later years. Your sparkle and dynamism are likely to grow along with you. You will do more and more in time.

With maturity comes increased awareness of your own needs and desires. Less tied to what other people think and value, you are truer to yourself. More direct and spontaneous, you have less patience for game playing. Life, you feel, is meant to be lived to the full.

You devote yourself to a wholehearted pursuit of excitement, activity and drama.

If It Feels Good, Do It!

A movement in your life is toward increasing focus on pleasure, sensuality and enjoyment of the physical world. Your possessions, appetites and aesthetic involvements are likely to be more important to you. Comfort, ease and harmony become more central goals in your life.

* * * * *

The above concludes your PLANETARY PROFILE. We hope this has been a valuable experience for you and would like to think that you will re-read certain sections. If this work has reaffirmed your uniqueness and specialness as an irreplaceable human being; if it has suggested some new possibilities to you; if it has implied some alternatives; if it has assisted you in examining some challenges; if it has aided any insights; if it has confirmed your knowledge of your own inner being, then we--and you--have succeeded.

We wish you all the best in life, in love, in Light!